SHAGGIEST CUSTOMER that hairdresser Paul Bowman has every faced is this woolly mammoth the Provincial Museum is erecting in its new hall. Bowman will be trying to clip and tease musk ox hair into the style popular among mammoths when the ancient bogs of B.C. were their stomping grounds.

It's a Real Shaggy Mammoth Story

By PAUL MOSS
Times Staff

Victoria hairdresser Paul Bowman today visited the Provincial Museum for a trim-and-style appointment with his biggest, oldest and shaggiest customer — a woolly mammoth.

It was his first look at what's going to be (the pun is irresistible) a mammoth task.

"I haven't stopped laughing yet," Bowman said, as he got to work analyzing the prehistoric giant's locks and cautiously trying a tease here, a curl there.

Bowman said he was startled when a museum official phoned to book the appointment. Unisex hairstyles are one thing but a mammoth is, well, ridiculous.

He said the jokes and leg-pulls at the Fashion Focus salon in Nootka Court where he works have been coming thick and fast. For example:

"We do styles, perms, mammoths . . ."

Or: "Bring your mammoth in for a hairstyling every two million years."

He added with a groan: "It's not going to stop for months."

But Bowman, who has been in the hair business for six years, said he's excited by the challenge of attempting to create the authentic finishing touch to what will be one of the star attractions of the Museum's new natural history gallery.

A museum spokesman said these beasts which stomped the boggy lowlands of B.C., and ranged from as far north as Alaska down to Mexico, became extinct 6,000 to 12,000 years ago.

The styrofoam-on-plywood replica, designed and built under the supervision of museum taxidermist Richard Gibbs, is about to don an overcoat made up of the pelts of nine musk ox.

And Bowman's job is to wield scissors and curling iron to make the monster look the way a well-groomed mammoth oughter.

Snows and High Wind Claim Eight Lives

Times News Services

The worst storm of the year struck southern Ontario today, claiming at least eight lives.

Westerly winds blowing in gusts to near hurricane forces were reported in many areas and were expected to continue at close to 100 kilometres an hour until evening.

Visibility in eastern Ontario and the Lake Huron-Georgian Bay regions was close to zero in blowing snow. Snowbelt areas north and west of Toronto received 15 centimetres of snow.

In central Ontario heavy snowsqualls in the Sault Ste Marie region were expected to continue throughout the day. Heavy snows in the North Bay region overnight continued today and blowing snow became a driving hazard.

At least eight persons have been killed so far in storm-related accidents.

Provincial police in Woodstock said six persons died and another three were injured in a two-vehicle crash on Highway 2, just outside that city.

And in Millbrook, just south of Peterborough, half a province away from Woodstock, police reported two persons killed when their car collided wih a tractor-trailer on Highway 115.

Driving conditions were reported to be hazardous in both areas at the time of the crashes, with drifting snow and high winds.

Meanwhile, a Canadian freighter, caught in heavy seas and gusty winds in icy Lake Erie, was breaking up and sinking today 18 miles off Ashtabula, Ohio, and its captain requested immediate rescue of the ship's 20-man crew, the U.S. Coast Guard said.

The Coast Guard sent a helicopter from Detroit to the 100-metre Labradoc, a freighter carrying 160,000 bushels of corn, and was making a last ditch effort to rescue the crew. But the efforts were hampered by heavy seas and wind gusts in excess of 50 knots. The Coast Guard said there was the danger that the helicopter would encounter severe turbulence en route to the scene and also could be downed in the lake.

"The ship is breaking up in the lake and is taking on more water," a Coast Guard spokesman said. "The ship's captain has requested immediate evacuation for himself and the crew.

"There's a Canadian freighter near the scene, but it's doubtful it will be able to aid in the rescue because of the conditions. We're attempting to launch a helicopter from Detroit and if it makes it to the scene we will launch another. But until we're sure it gets there, the other helicopter will remain on the ground."

The Labradoc, which first reported trouble at 3:15 a.m., had been listing at 26 degrees to the port side in seas in excess of 6 metres and taking on water faster than had been expected.

On the U.S. side of the Great Lakes, gusts of up to 145 kilometres an hour tore down power lines and trees, damaged buildings and darkened thousands of homes in northern and east-central Illinois, while frigid winds brought near-blizzard conditions to the region.

At least four deaths were blamed on the weather.

Baby Held For Debt

MANILA (AP) — A judge in the Philippines has ordered a hospital and a social worker to return a girl born almost three years ago and held by the hospital because the parents couldn't pay the bill.

"Babies are not chattel, and they cannot be made collateral to ensure payment of an indebtedness," Judge Wilelmo Fortun ruled in Lingayen, the northern Philippines.

To convert a baby into collateral or security "would not only be inhuman, uncharitable and un-Christian, but also illegal and unconstitutional," he said.

Fortun's ruling upheld a habeas corpus motion by Elpidio and Erlinda Riola demanding that Nazareth General Hospital and government social worker Petra Garcia surrender the child.

Court records showed the baby was born Aug. 15, 1976, but because of illness had to spend its first eight months under treatment at the private hospital.

The bill amounted to more than $735, but the Riolas said they could pay only half as a down payment and promised to pay the rest. The hospital refused and turned the baby over to the social services ministry.

M-B Sets Records

The Vancouver-based forest industries giant reported net earnings of $100.9 million or $4.50 a share for the year, compared with net earnings of $60.6 million or $2.70 a share in 1977.

Sales were $2 billion, compared with $1.7 billion the previous year.

Radical Energy Plan for U.S.

Times News Services

WASHINGTON — If U.S. President Jimmy Carter's entire energy program goes into effect, it could change forever the way people south of the border use oil, burn gas, or even buy the thousands of products that come from petroleum.

Carter Thursday night, said he would gradually lift price lids on domestically produced crude oil, leading to total decontrol by mid-1981 — a goal long sought by the U.S. oil industry.

The action would help conserve oil by making it more expensive and also would provide a financial incentive to U.S. oil companies to seek and develop new oil fields, he said.

Administration officials said Carter's deregulaton plan would add four to five cents a gallon to the price of gasoline and other petroleum products by mid-1981. But other unofficial estimates put the total increase at up to 15 cents a gallon.

U.S.-produced oil now is held at about $9 for a 42-gallon barrel. Carter's plan would allow it to rise gradually to the world market price of about $15 a barrel.

Carter needs Congress' go-ahead for some parts of the program, but has the power to lift oil price controls and effect some of the other proposals.

— Gasoline prices will go up — maybe only a cent or so the first year but a lot of cents per gallon by 1983.

— Shopping and work places would be cooler in winter and warmer in summer as thermostat limits are imposed: 19 degrees for

Meet The Stars

Jane Fonda is the runaway favorite among Victorians to win the Oscar for best actress, according to early returns in the Times—VI90 Visit the Stars contest.

She is far ahead of Jill Clayburgh, Geraldine Page, Ingrid Bergman and Ellen Burstyn, according to a spot check of the first 1,000 entries in the contest.

For best actor, the early returns favor Warren Beatty and Robert de Niro while Heaven Can Wait and The Deerhunter are well liked as best picture.

The real winners will be known on Oscar night April 9 and, two days later, those readers who have correctly predicted the winners for best actor, best actress and best movie will be entered for a chance to win a trip for two to Hollywood or one of five major consolation prizes. Full details are in an advertisement today on page 22.

A drawing for the prizes will be made at a special matinee at the Towne Cinema Wednesday, April 11.

Tickets to attend the drawing, and to see a free George C. Scott comedy Movie, Movie will be mailed out to 150 people who enter the contest early, whether they have the right answers or not. Readers are advised to enter by tonight at the latest to have a chance for the theatre tickets. But entries mailed later will continue to have a chance for the major prizes, if they have the right answers.

Young, Smith Pick Socreds

Two of Greater Victoria's best known civic politicians — Victoria Mayor Mike Young and Oak Bay Mayor Brian Smith — have signed up with the Socreds as potential provincial election candidates.

Young announced today he'll take a crack at obtaining a Socred nomination in the two-seat Victoria riding where Deregulation Minister Sam Bawlf is expected to run while Smith will seek the Oak Bay-Gordon Head nomination.

Smith, a lawyer, was defeated by car dealer Frank Carson at a Socred nomination meeting before the March 20, 1978, byelection.

Conservative leader Vic Stephens went on to win the election and Smith said as a result of the public exposure Stephens has received because he is a party leader, the Oak Bay campaign will be a tough one.

"I think I'll be the underdog but I'm not worried about that," he said in an interview.

Young, who said he only made up his mind this morning, told reporters if he wins the nomination and a seat as an MLA, he will comtinue to serve as mayor until his term expires in November.

Young is currently in his second mayoralty term and earlier was a city aldermen.

He said he will work to improve the city's dialogue with the provincial government.

Smith said he has represented a good portion of the riding at the local level for 10 years and so knows the area. He was first elected alderman in 1969 and again in 1971. He became mayor in November, 1973, and has served in that role since.

The issue in the May 11 election as far as Oak Bay is concerned will be "Where can you get your best representation?" Smith said.

Saboteurs Blast N-Factory

Times News Services

TOULON — A series of explosions touched off by a team of saboteurs wrecked or damaged nuclear reactors and other atomic equipment built for foreign countries including Iraq, French police said today.

The blasts caused damage estimated at millions of dollars in the nuclear department of the Mediterranean Naval and Industrial Co. plant at nearby Seyne-sur-Mer, police said.

The blasts were the most spectacular single attack on atomic equipment in France since unknown attackers tried to sabotage a nuclear power plant in eastern France four years ago.

The damaged equipment included two experimental nuclear reactors France had built for Iraq to allow the Arab country to familiarize itself with atomic energy. Israel has sharply protested the French-Iraqi nuclear accord claiming the equipment might allow Iraq to acquire military nuclear capability.

Other heavily damaged equipment in the wrecked warehouse included a steel container for atomic piles also destined for Iraq, nuclear component equipment for Belgium and a huge steel cover for a storage tank for radioactive elements which was built for the West German power plant at Kalkar, police said.

None of the three guards posted around the huge warehouse during the night were injured in the explosions which, police investigators said, were the work of experts.

Authorities said there was no radioactive material anywhere in the plant which merely produces the mechanical parts of nuclear equipment.

An anonymous telephone call to the newspaper Le Monde in Paris claimed the explosions were carried out by a so-called "Group of French Ecologists" inspired by the Pennsylvania nuclear power plant accident.

In other repercussions from the Harrisburg disaster, West German Interior Minister Gerhard Baum said the Bonn government will reconsider its nuclear

I Was in Disgrace - Maggie

TORONTO (CP) — Margaret Trudeau says that following her separation from Pierre she spent a "lost year . . . of anxious days, drug-high nights, phoney glamor, botched friendships and betrayals."

One morning after a "truly sleazy evening" at Studio 54 in New York she covered sheets of paper with a desperate scrawl: "Help me, please."

"Fast and furious, I searched for freedom at a pace that took me only around in circles," the estranged wife of Prime Minister Trudeau writes in the last of five serialized installments of her autobiography Beyond Reason, published in newspapers Friday.

She tells of her escapade in Toronto with the Rolling Stones rock group, of appearing in public with a black eye, of being hounded by reporters, of her relationship with mineral water executive Bruce Nevins and of her nights at Studio 54.

"In the eyes of the world my weekend with the Rolling Stones was the freedom trip to end all freedom trips," Mrs. Trudeau says of the March, 1977, incident in Toronto.

"Without Yasmin Aga Khan, my great friend in New York, I would certainly have gone mad.

"She took me and did her best to protect me from the battalions of reporters who laid siege all night to our front door."

Although Margaret was branded "a promiscuous irresponsible wife, prepared to go to any lengths to escape her husband," it was worse for her husband, Mrs. Trudeau writes.

"People in Canada yelled 'cuckold' when they saw him pass in the streets.

"Stony-faced, he pretended nothing was wrong. When I got back to Ottawa I was in disgrace, total unredeemable disgrace."

The next time she appeared in public she had a black eye.

After Margaret and Pierre signed a statement of separation on May 27, 1977, Margaret left for New York, "but not before I had received one letter of genuine support — from Prince Charles."

In New York she was inundated with job offers, but she says they were from people who wanted to exploit her for an exclusive story.

She shared a "warm love" in New York with Bruce Nevins, head of a mineral water company, but realized with some sadness that Nevins was a confirmed bachelor.

Invaders Mop Up

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — Tanzanian troops and Ugandan rebel forces were reported mopping up remnants of President Idi Amin's forces in the Ugandan capital of Kampala today as Libyan troops, the bulwark of his defences, retreated eastward.

Amin and loyalist troops were reported to have dug in today at Jinja, 80 kilometres east of Kampala, for a last stand against the invasion force.

Sources said the Libyans are joining Amin in Jinja. But it was unclear whether they planned to use the city, Uganda's second-largest, as a staging area for a quick evacuation to Libya.

The strategy of the Tanzanians and leaders of the Ugandan National Liberation Front is evidently to avoid damage and bloodshed in taking the capital. But exiles said drastic food shortages in the city are making a quick takeover imperative.

If Kampala is captured and the Libyans leave, military observers said, Amin would have little hope of maintaining any support.

Diplomats and others there said Kampala was calm through the night.

Aussie Truckers Squeeze

SYDNEY (AP) — Striking independent truck owner-drivers tightened their blockade of Australia's major cities today, causing food shortages and fears of violence. The big immobilized rigs virtually strangled the highway network.

Premier Neville Wran of the state of New South Wales, Australia's largest, said the week-old strike "borders on civil insurrection . . . . This is the most serious situation Australia has faced for several decades."

Wran agreed to meet with striking drivers, who demand lower road taxes and higher freight rates. He admitted there were not enough police available to clear the 3,000 trucks from the roads.

"If the police try and move us it will be the Third World War," said the trucker spokesman Ted (Greendog) Stevens, who has set up a field headquarters on Razorback Mountain, 80 kilometres south of Sydney.

The strike by the owner-operators, who carry about 60 per cent of all road freight in Australia, has paralysed the food distribution system.

With trucks flung across highways at about 40 points from the western to eastern coasts, supplies of fresh food have been cut off from city markets. The drivers allow only passenger vehicles through.

Police said the truckers use citizen-band radios to co-ordinate blocks on back roads aimed at stopping blockade runners.

Stevens and several hundred of his fellow operators began the strike at Razorback last Friday. They said they would not move until they spoke to state Transport Minister Peter Cox. The demands then escalated and they called on Wran to go to Razorback Mountain.

When drivers in other states set up other road blocks, Stevens demanded to see federal Transport Minister Peter Nixon. "The matter is out of the states' hands now," he said.

A drivers' delegation walked out of a meeting Thursday with the state minister for industrial relations, Pat Hills, protesting the presence of members of the Transport Worker's Union.

Hills said afterward the truckers were "the most unreasonable group of people I have ever sat down with."

He said the drivers should pick some new delegates "with a bit of brain."

development plans.

Speaking at a meeting of the parliamentary interior committee, Baum said "we must ask ourselves whether, weighing the dangers of nuclear power with those of other forms of energy, the use of nuclear power is unrenouncable."

It was the first time a minister has publicly deviated from the government position that there is no alternative to nuclear power. The country operates about 15 nuclear plants and has expected to have 30 in operation by the mid-1980s.

And in Canada, concern about the safety of nuclear power plants grew stronger following a disclosure by Hydro-Quebec that serious safety problems could exist at Candu reactors under construction in three provinces.

Hydro spokesman Francine Charette said steam generators in reactors being built at Gentilly, Que., Pickering, Ont., and Pointe-Lepreau, N.B., may contain faulty tubing that could result in leaks of radioactive heavy water unless they are repaired.

The provincial utilities that own the plants were advised about the faulty tubing more than a month ago by the manufacturer, Babcock and Wilcox Canada Ltd., of Cambridge, Ont.

Babcock and Wilcox's U.S. parent company manufactured some of the equipment blamed for the recent Three Mile Island nuclear accident in Pennsylvania.

Ms. Charette said the company advised the utilities that some of the metal tubing in the heat-exchange equipment inside the generators may be porous because of manufacturing defects.

She said there is no radiation hazard for the general public, since any radioactive water leaking from the tubing would remain within a closed system inside the plant. However, a leak could pose operating problems for the reactor.

the weather

A frontal system crossed the south coast this morning and was travelling rapidly east to reach the Alberta border this evening. The system will be accompanied by shower activity. Following the system will be a small ridge of high pressure which will ensure sunny periods for the coastal areas this afternoon and the odd sunny break for the interior. Unfortunately, another major system is on its way from the pacific and will hit the north coast overnight with strong winds and rain. The cloud from the disturbance will have spread across most of the province Sunday afternoon with the exception of the southern interior.

Zafar Had His Own Welfare at Heart. . .

The books cooked by accountant Neimat Zafar in the British Midlands' city of Birmingham were none other than those of the government. Zafar, who claimed to be unemployed, also claimed to be a family man. In fact, he claimed, he had 49 children by three wives. Police suggest he was not working as an accountant because he had problems with figures. They said about 45 of the children and one spouse existed only on paper for the purpose of obtaining welfare payments. Zafar Thursday was sentenced to three years in jail for filing $74,000 in false social security claims over a period of several years. Police said Zafar owned eight houses, a grocery store, an office and two Japanese cars and had withdrawn $20,000 from his bank account since his arrest.

Embarrassing Jacques Lavoie has caused more red faces in the federal Liberal party. Lavoie first had the Liberals gritting their teeth in 1975 when, running as a Conservative in a byelection in Montreal's Hochelaga riding, he upset prestige candidate Pierre Juneau, former head of the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission. Later, it was the Tories who were left with red faces when Lavoie crossed the Commons floor to sit with the Liberals. The wheel came full circle Thursday, when Lavoie announced he would run as an independent against Liberal Serge Joyal, in the May 22 general election.

Fredericks of Hollywood is known for transparent lingerie, not rock concerts — but that was before the Boomtown Rats came along. The Rats, an Irish "New Wave" rock group, are touring the United States, playing in places they feel best represent the city they're in — like a chocolate factory in Hershey, Pa., and a General Motors plant in Detroit. For Hollywood, Fredericks was a natural. Head Rat Bob Geldof and his motley crew arrived in a grubby taxicab while police roped off the area against the mob that followed to hear such recent Rat releases as I Never Loved Eva Braun. Asked if the boutique ever had held a rock concert before, an elderly clerk said, "It's the first time — and I think it's the last."

California Gov. Jerry Brown headed today for a 41st birthday celebration in Africa and passengers aboard his plane from New York said he was accompanied by singer Linda Ronstadt, with whom he has been romantically linked. The governor and a woman companion dodged reporters at Kennedy Airport and were whisked away in a police car. Passengers aboard the flight identified the woman as Miss Ronstadt. Political observers believe Brown's choice of Africa for a birthday vacation is part of a campaign to polish his presidential image overseas and boost his share of the black vote if he challenges Jimmy Carter for the Democratic presidential nomination.

IRWIN

CAPUDJI
. . . visit to Rome

Controversial Greek Catholic Archbishop Hilarion Capudji arrived in Rome on Thursday amid expectations that he will be received by Pope John Paul. The Syrian-born prelate, who once served almost three years in an Israeli prison on charges of smuggling guns for Palestinian guerrillas, has visited Syria and Iran recently to help promote Palestinian causes.

Dolores Novel has lost a Housing Court appeal and must leave New York's Beacon Hotel, taking her pets with her. City public health officials who inspected the woman's room there last September discovered "one live turkey, two ducks, approximately 17 cats and maybe more, one rabbit, four live turtles in a bathtub and one animal resembling a dog or fox."

The California Court of Appeal has upheld the 1977 conviction of Patricia Hearst's one-time fugitive companion, Wendy Yoshimura, on weapons charges. Ms. Yoshimura could not be reached for comment. Her lawyer, Dennis Riordan, said he will appeal the decision. She faces up to 15 years in prison on the charges.

And, in another action, New York Supreme Court Justice Andrew DiPaola says Brenda Blinderman isn't entitled to half her ex-husband's New York Islanders' hockey playoff tickets, and furthermore he wasn't happy to have the issue cluttering up his Mineola, N.Y., court calendar. Mrs. Blinderman says prior to their 1977 divorce, husband Steven promised her half his playoff seats. He didn't deliver so she sued. Said DiPaola, "You have compelled this court to take time from its busy and overburdened schedule to referee a frivolous and nonsensical dispute." On top of all that, he says Mrs. Blinderman's petition listed "the wrong seats."

It hasn't got to court yet, but. . .at the age of 10, Thomas Irwin, of McHenry, Ill., is brilliant, but "bored to death in school," his mother says. Bored enough for his parents to file a $1-million suit against the school district over the quality of his education. His parents said they decided it was time to file suit when the school board reversed a decision to let Thomas attend a high school class, the only one he found stimulating. School district officials have declined to comment. District lawyers are to file a formal response by the end of April. Joyce Van Tassel of the Illinois Office of Education in Springfield said the suit could give the courts an opportunity to define, for the first time, how far public school systems are obligated to go in providing extra programs and classes for bright children.

World chess champion Anatoly Karpov has challenged Montreal women to take him on in a special Mother's Day tournament next month. A computer will first play the challengers to select the city's ten best women players. The ten will then play off to determine who will face Karpov May 13. The 27-year-old Soviet native arrived in Montreal Thursday for next week's international chess championship, which will bring together some of the world's best players.

And, finally, hamburglar Ronald McDonald robbed Burger King today in Columbus, Ohio, of $6.50 worth of Yumbos — but he didn't get far. His getaway car wouldn't start. The 18-year-old McDonald's motive may have been revenge more than a penchant for ham and cheese sandwiches. Among friends, he's known as "Clown."

Party Expels Mulder

JOHANNESBURG (UPI) — The ruling National Party today expelled Connie Mulder, a former candidate for the premiership, from the party for his role in South Africa's information scandal.

The expulsion was announced after Mulder refused to withdraw his charges that South African President John Vorster and Finance Minister Owen Horwood knew that government funds were secretly used to finance an English-language newspaper in Johannesburg.

Mulder earlier had been forced to resign his cabinet position as race relations minister and his seat in Parliament because of his actions while serving as information minister in 1976.

Bosses, Drivers Talking In U.S.

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Federal mediators are keeping the striking Teamsters union and trucking industry at the bargaining table.

Joint talks were recessed Thursday night until today after negotiators for the two sides had spent more than 5 ½ hours with chief federal mediator Wayne Horvitz.

There was no statement on what, if any, progress had been made toward settling the six-day-old strike and retailiatory industry lockout that has sharply reduced auto production and cut work schedules of hundreds of thousands of autoworkers.

Asked if there had been any progress during Thursday's session, Horvitz shrugged his shoulders.

"It's tough," he said. "It's tough once they're out on strike."

Thursday's meeting, which included both joint and separate sessions with the mediators, was the first face-to-face contact between the two sides since the giant union struck 73 selected trucking firms early Sunday just after the 3-year-old National Master Freight Agreement expired.

The industry immediately retailiated by locking out all 300,000 workers covered by the contract in what it called a "defensive shutdown" of the industry.

At least 115,000 auto workers have been either laid off or put on reduced work schedules because of manufacturers' inability to obtain materials and parts.

General Motors Thursday closed a GMC truck plant in Pontiac, Mich., idling 2,700 more workers, a car assembly plant in Arlington, Texas, laying off 4,000 workers, and a bearings plant in Sandusky, Ohio, affecting 150 workers.

There were forecasts car production could be halted unless parts shipments are restored quickly.

About 700 workers were laid off at one of two Whirlpool Co. plants in Evansville, Ill., Thursday, and another 2,500 face layoff if there is no settlement by Sunday.

Principal differences remaining between the two sides have been narrowed to a union demand for semi-annual cost-of-living adjustments, instead of yearly; and items involving holidays, sick leave, and lodging and meal allowances.

Plea for Clemency Fails

JOHANNESBURG (UPI) — A young black revolutionary convicted of participating in the murder of two whites was hanged today by South African authorities despite pleas for mercy by U.S. President Jimmy Carter and other world leaders.

Prison officials said Solomon Mahlangu, 22, was executed with four other men in the central courtyard of Pretoria Prison shortly after dawn. The deaths brought to 37 the number of people executed in South Africa this year.

Prime Minister Pieter Botha Thursday rejected Carter's letter asking that clemency be granted, saying that the procedures dictated by South African law would be followed.

"It is not for me to interfere in the course of the law," said Botha who as premier could have recommended to South African President John Vorster that Mahlangu be granted clemency.

Mahlangu was convicted of taking part in the so-called "Goch Street killings," in which he and two other young revolutionaries were convicted of killing two whites in a Johannesburg warehouse in June 1977.

The three were accused of trying to enter the black township of Soweto with the intention of sparking a violent confrontation with police on the first anniversary of the riots that killed more than 800 blacks across South Africa.

Mahlangu was the only one of the three youths to be hanged. The one who actually fired the fatal shots was beaten senseless with a broomstick by one of the men he was shooting at and suffered such severe brain damage that he was judged unfit to stand trial. The third youth escaped.

Mahlangu, who sources said much of his last few days praying, was one of thousands of Soweto students who fled the violence in 1976 and travelled to neighboring Mozambique and Angola for military training by black nationalist guerrillas.

Protests against the hanging also came from leaders in France, Britain and Belgium.

Free trade

In searching for a common theme in Canadian politics, the economic historian's explanation of how the country developed — as one long debate about free trade with the United States — is probably as valid as the more traditional textbook theories which focus on two centuries of French-English conflict and the opening up of the west by millions of immigrants.

It was exactly a century ago that John A. Macdonald put together his National Policy of tariff protection for Canadian manufacturing. It kept the Conservatives in power for the next two decades. The Liberal administration of Wilfrid Laurier which succeeded the Tories was defeated in 1911 after 15 years in office only when it raised the possibility of abolishing the tariff wall.

Liberals recalled the period of prosperity from 1854 to 1866 when a number of natural products were traded without tariff between Canada and the U.S., Atlantic fishing rights were exchanged and shipping from both nations operated freely on the Great Lakes and St. Lawrence River under a reciprocity treaty. (Although modern historians say it had little to do with the advent of good times, politicians of the time linked reciprocity with a boom in trade and commerce.)

Several attempts in ensuing years to renew the treaty failed, until the Liberals under Laurier managed to get a tentative agreement from President Taft to eliminate tariffs on natural farm products and lower the duty on a variety of secondary products and manufactured items.

But the Conservatives were re-elected on the slogan: "No truck nor trade with the Yankees."

Reciprocity has an antique ring to it these days but it was a central issue of Canadian politics throughout the 19th century. Under the modern headings of free trade and economic nationalism, the issue continues to dominate politics.

According to recent news reports from New York, negotiations are proceeding between Canada and the U.S. on lowering tariffs on a broad range of items. A recent Senate report endorsed free trade with the U.S. and promptly disappeared from view. The issue of free trade has very important ramifications for the future of Canada, but unfortunately it has been submerged in our preoccupation with domestic economic woes. It's ironic, as the free traders have a strong argument that lowering tariffs will improve Canada's economic situation. The issue deserves more attention than it's getting.

As Prof. Laudadio notes elsewhere on this page, free trade generally makes economic life less secure but the opportunities it opens up will challenge Canadians to become more productive and inventive.

It is difficult to find an economist who does not favor liberalization of trade, especially in B.C. which depends heavily on exports of raw materials and semi-finished goods. B.C. has no stake in protecting Canadian manufacturing, now the prime beneficiary of Ottawa's tariff policy, and neither do the prairie provinces or the maritimes.

"It has been argued for a hundred years that protectionism has weakened the maritimes, inhibited growth in the west and unfairly strengthened central Canada," the Senate report said.

Free trade might balance national accounts a little more fairly. Certainly, free trade would not be accomplished overnight. At present, 70 per cent of U.S.-Canada trade is carried on without tariffs; the New York talks apparently would raise that figure to ariund 80 per cent, in effect a 14 per cent increase.

If begun now, negotiations would take several years and there would have to be a 10- to 15-year period in which tariffs are lowered slowly in concert on both sides of the border. Still, there would be dislocation. Some industries would suffer and a major program of assistance would be required.

But that is a long way off. The first step is public discussion, and the present election campaigns provide a good opportunity for the debate to start.

Funny peculiar

Premier Bill Bennett made the first joke of the provincial election campaign when he soberly issued an invitation to debate three on one with the secretary of the B.C. Federation of Labor, the leader of the New Democratic Party and the former NDP resources minister, Bob Williams.

The NDP came back with its own reply. Ha, ha, said NDP House leader, Bill King, that's like the premier calling on Jack Davis and Bob Sommers as debating partners.

It's hard to choose the funnier joke — the premier building up Williams, who is now a Port Moody publican running a hotel, as the wire-pulling eminence grise of the NDP (could any mere individual control such a fractious party?), or King suggesting comparisons between his party confreres and the only two B.C. cabinet ministers ever convicted of felonies.

Not so funny was the premier's reference to the NDP as the force of "national socialism" in Canada. On the day he called the election he used it several times on a radio program, and again in his provincially-televised speech at supper time.

Some say he is totally oblivious to the ugly connotations of "National Socialist" — another name for Nazi — which is a telling commentary in itself. But give him the benefit of the doubt. Now he knows. Let's hear no more of this nasty innuendo in the election campaign.

'Canada would be better off with free trade'

By LEONARD LAUDADIO

Dr. Laudadio is professor of economics and chairman of the department at the University of Victoria.

It is well known that economists seldom agree on policy matters. This in turn, has given rise to a variety of "economist jokes", some of them even amusing:

"If you have 12 economists meeting in one room, you will get 13 opinions, because by the end of the meeting one of them will have changed his mind." Or, to quote one that Trudeau likes: "What Canada needs is a one-armed economist, so that, after he gives an opinion, he won't be able to say 'But, on the other hand.' "

Policy questions always involve value judgment which may lead to differences of opinion.

In the case of international trade policies, however, the theory has changed little in the last 200 years. The virtually unanimous advice given by economists is in favor of free trade. Yet the use of tariffs and quotas that impede the free flow of goods among nations is the rule rather than the exception. Why has the advice not been followed?

What economic theory shows is that, in the long run, free trade allows different nations to specialize, promotes efficient allocation of resources, allows the production of the largest possible amount of goods and services and finally leads to a higher standard of living.

In any country, a group that is successful in promoting policies — tariffs or quotas — that reduce imports of a particular good will benefit at the expense of other groups in the same country.

Tariffs on shoe imports will increase the domestic price of shoes and raise the wages and profits in the shoe industry above the competitive level. The increase in the well-being of the workers and capitalists in the shoe industry is paid for by a loss of well-being of the consumers who have to pay a higher price for shoes.

This is not a mere transfer of income from one group to another: economic analysis suggests that the total loss of real income by consumers is greater than the total increase in real income in the shoe industry. In other words, society could subsidize the shoe industry and, with free trade, would still be better off.

Tariffs and quotas continue to exist because it is in the interest of some groups to reduce or eliminate competition. These groups are well-organized and politically powerful. Consumers, who stand to gain from free trade, are neither.

There are all sorts of arguments which, with varying degrees of economic logic, can be used in support of policies that prevent free trade. But in the Canadian context, the non-economic arguments, which require neither sound reasoning nor factual support, are the foundation of protectionist policies. These policies which took shape in the 1870s were not aimed at improving the economic well-being of the Canadian people. The National Policy of John A. Macdonald had a larger objective: that of building the Canadian nation. Presumably, Canada could become a strong nation only if it did not have to rely on international trade to obtain some crucial manufactured products. Self-sufficiency was to be the road to national unity and the tariff became the major tool to be used in building that road.

There is considerable doubt that Canadian unity and strength have been enhanced by the use of the protective tariff. One of the last desirable consequences of protectionist trade policy has been the increase in foreign ownership — especially American — of Canadian industries. The tariff-created profitable opportunities to build branch plants, which not only increased foreign domination but reduced efficiency in Canadian manufacturing. These branch plants are usually smaller, less specialized and less efficient than U.S. plants. By reducing the competition, the tariff wall creates and maintains the inefficiencies which strong competition would sweep away.

The tariff-induced domination of the Canadian economy has also weakened our ablity to introduce product innovation. American branch plants have no incentive to finance their own research. What they produce is an exact copy of the goods produced in the U.S., where all the research is done. Equally detrimental has been Canada's failure to develop a native entrepreneurial class, and to formulate an industrial strategy that would be appropriate for Canadians. Most of the important industrial decisions are made abroad.

Currently there is renewed interest in free trade, at least in lowering trade barriers between Canada and the United States. But there are deep currents of opposition. Again, the non-economic arguments — outside of the residual echoes still in tune with the National Policy theme — range all the way from blatant anti-Americanism to mystic nationalism.

The economic arguments in favor of protectionism cannot be quickly dismissed. Since Canadian tariffs protect mainly the manufacturing industries, it is widely believed that eliminating or reducing the tariff will destroy the manufacturing sector, cause widespread unemployment and confine our economy to the production of natural resources. The manufacturing sector would presumably move to the U.S., where everything, many Canadians believe, can be produced more efficiently and more cheaply than in Canada.

These fears are exaggerated and, in some cases, not based on fact. For instance, the Canadian steel and aluminum industries are at least as efficient as their American counterparts and, and with free trade they would certainly become net exporters to the United States. Also, the relative inefficiency of many protected Canadian industries is not due to the lack of skills or lower productivity of the Canadian workers, but is the result of poor and inefficient production techniques adopted by Canadian firms. Tariff protection allowed the Canadian industry to relax excessively and to adopt inferior techniques. The reduction of trade barriers would eliminate most of these inefficiencies.

However, the effects on employment cannot be entirely avoided. Production patterns will change under the stimulus of added competition. Some industries in some regions will decline, other industries in other regions will grow. Some jobs will disappear, some new employment opportunities will arise. In other words, increased trade requires adjustment.

It is important, however, not to magnify unduly the effect of free trade on employment. Under present conditions, only 15 per cent of the total labor force in Canada is employed in industries protected by a tariff of five per cent or higher. Many of these industries are basically efficient but receive protection simply because it is available and it makes life easier.

Other industries produce certain goods efficiently and other goods inefficiently. In either case, increased competition might require some reorientation of production but would cause no serious disruption.

Certainly, some industries can exist only under heavy tariff protection. With free trade, employment in these industries will fall. This is the major cost of tariff reduction, but it is not likely to be very large and it will be balanced by a reduction of consumers' prices and by increased employment in other industries.

The costs and benefits of free trade will not be evenly distributed through every region in Canada. Now, the benefits of protected trade accrue mostly to Ontario and Quebec through higher incomes and more jobs, and the costs, through higher prices and lower incomes, are borne mostly by the maritimes and western provinces. If trade barriers are lowered, Ontario and Quebec may experience some difficulties, while the other provinces will certainly benefit. Regardless of the distribution of the gains and losses, when we start to move toward free trade we will have to do it gradually and carefully. Sudden shifts in production and trade patterns would carry large economic and social costs.

A movement towards free trade will not make everybody better off. But it will open new opportunities. Free trade makes economic life less secure, but it also makes it more challenging, more productive and more enriching. In spite of the lingering feeling that Canadians are not as efficient as other people — a feeling introduced and fed by protectionist policies — Canadians in fact are well equipped to meet the challenge of free trade. We have a large supply of skilled labor.

More important, we have a substantial pool of highly trained scientific talent whose contribution to the Canadian economy has been restricted by protectionist policies. With the strengthening of competition which will accompay trade liberalization, Canadian industries will become more efficient and, at the same time, will become aware of the profitability of research and development. This may provide the economic incentive that will induce Canadian industry to make Canada technologically independent.

We have tried protectionism. It has robbed Canadians of their self-confidence. Let us start moving toward the elimination of trade barriers.

Restricting trade

One of the factors which is frustrating Canadians and causing tensions betweem various parts of this country is the existence of a large number of internal, concealed barriers to trade across provincial boundaries. These barriers not only discourage or prevent the free exchange of goods and services in the country; they increase the cost of these goods and services enormously, making our cost-of-living higher than that of the U.S.

After years of bargaining it now seems that Canada will soon have a free trade agreement with the U.S. We struggle for free trade between neighboring nations but maintain a network of restrictions to trade inside our own country. A case in point is the pricing of beer and wines (Pricey Liquor; Times, March 8).

Mr. Wallace, general manager of the B.C. liquor distribution branch, is quoted as saying that the prices of liquor and wines are designed to "encourage moderation" and to "produce revenue." I submit that there is a third basis for pricing, namely, to control competition. The "markup" used by the LDB is reported to be 43 per cent for local wines, but 100 per cent "for wine from other provinces or foreign countries." Other provinces in Canada are to the LDB the same thing as "foreign countries." Furthermore, according to the report, other provinces like Ontario and Alberta behave in the same manner toward each other and B.C. as we do.

It is an established custom in Canada that provinces impose crushing barriers against trade with each other in the guise of producing revenue.

The extra 57 per cent "markup" on Ontario wines (over and above the 43 per cent in the local B.C. product) is not, in fact, a markup; it is a concealed ad valorem duty designed to restrict the exchange of this product between provinces, to protect the local producer. This is only one case of interprovincial trade restrictions in Canada, but it is one of many.

The existence of these disguised taxes is contrary to the provisions of Section 91, subsection two of the BNA Act, which assigns the regulation of trade and commerce to the federal government, and to those of Section 92, subsection two, which restricts the taxation rights of the provinces to the field of direct taxes. These two sections of the act were designed, among other reasons, to assure unfettered trade throughout the length and breadth of this nation.

The violation of these two provisions of the BNA Act of the kind which I have described should have been challenged in the courts whenever they appeared. They are as restrictive to internal trade as are many regulations imposed by our marketing boards.

As well as revising and rebuilding our constitution, we need as a nation to re-examine in a very serious way our observance — or failure to observe — the constitution as it now exists. — A. F. Deverell, 601-2910 Cook Street.

Gobbledygook

Just as I and others have been predicting for three years, the millionaires club are running true to the form that made them millionaires.

All political parties at times try to buy votes, but this gang adds insult to injury day by day by using our money to buy our votes.

First the ridiculous nonsense of the five "free" shares which we already owned and which now will gradually find their way into the same millionaires' pockets, and now a bribery budget offering a bunch of insubstantial trinkets bought with the money they have stolen from us over the past three years by overtaxing, raising rates, cutting services, etc. and generally gouging us under cover of a balanced budget and repayment of a debt that never existed under the NDP.

If there are any deluded souls with a mind to think, with the knowledge to read and seek out the facts, and who fall for this gobbledygook, we are in for a sad time. — P. Simpson, 2536 Forbes Street.

Tommy ignored?

One must wonder if the democratic process has any chance of success in Canada when a newspaper with the prestige of the Victoria Times almost totally overlooks an event such as the banquet in Esquimalt honoring Tommy Douglas upon his retirement from the House of Commons.

Your token coverage of the occasion was hidden away on page 39 and was a mess of inaccuracies and inadequacies.

Mr. Douglas was first elected tothe Houe of Commons as the member for Weyburn, Sask., in 1935, so he is completing a 45-year political career, not 25-year, as you report. In 1944 he left the federal house to lead the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation (CCF) in Saskatchewan and to become premier of that province in June of that year.

For 18 years he continued as premier of Saskatchewan and during that period he introduced for the first time many items of legislation which have since been adopted by most of the other provinces. One which affects the life of practically everyone was universal, pre-paid hospitalization insurance. Mr. Douglas also laid much of the groundwork for the introduction of medicare, but it was not he who actually introduced medicare.

Here is what really happened: In 1962 Mr. Douglas was called upon to return to the federal field as the leader of the New Democratic Party, which encompassed the CCF. He felt free to make that move because he knew that he would have a highly competent successor in the person of Woodrow Stanley Lloyd. So, in fact, it was Premier Lloyd who caught the torch thrown by Tommy Douglas and brought to fruition the medicare plan. Amongst those at the head table of the banquet honoring Mr. Douglas was Mrs. Victoria Lloyd, who is the widow of Woodrow Lloyd, and who has been a resident of Colwood for the past five years.

Many Canadians consider Mr. Douglas to be one of the greatest Canadian political figures of all time. Is it too much to ask that you take a little care in reporting matters of such historical import? — Frank G. Hanson, Victoria.

Editor's Note: It was Mr. Douglas's career — which has been reported on at length in the Times — which is of "historical import" and not the recent banquet.

Magarrell family

I have been doing a family research of the family Magarrell. Are you one of the descendants of William and Isabel who came to Port Perry, Ontario in 1848 from Ireland? I would appreciate hearing from anyone knowing of the Magarrell family. — Mrs. P. Thomaschewski, Starbuck, Man. R0G 2P0.

Fat cat Toronto as confused as the rest of us

ALLAN FOTHERINGHAM

TORONTO — The spanking new Holt Renfrew temple to affluence hangs in shimmering stainless steel panels over a Bloor Street that is paved with credit cards.

Inside the store, now linked by financial umbilical cord to the Neiman-Marcus riches of Dallas and the Bergdorf-Goodman chic of New York, there is in the children's section a three-piece seersucker short-pant suit for a three-year-old fashioned by Manhattan designer Geoffrey Beene — that you can pick up for 120 clams.

Down the drag, in the Hazelton Lanes cocoon of boutiques in what used to be hippiedom's Yorkville, where the clothing of the shoppers now drip with initials, a small bauble of Easter chocolate for your tad comes at a cool $7.

All the while, in this election of our discontent, the burghers of Toronto complain that the economy is lousy and it's about time to cast the rascals out.

Frank Felkai, an earnest young lawyer who is Liberal candidate in Don Valley West, stood at a subway stop just after 8 in the morning and contemplated the number of commuters who refused to accept his Liberal literature.

"It was also the highest number of suntans I've seen in any of my mainstreeting ventures." He shrugs the shrug of a candidate who has been told the economy is lousy by subway passengers just back from Jamaica, Bermuda, Antigua and Nassau.

It is a measure of what is going on in this strange election that a reporter painfully making his way by rent-a-car across this fathomless land finds that the assertive, unlovable citystate of Toronto is more confused than anywhere as to what is going on.

"To tell the truth," says an intelligent young woman in a downtown office, "my opinion ranges from apathy to lethargy, verging on indifference."

It is — in an election off to an uncertain, tremulous start — a strikingly familiar reaction in the city that will probably decide it all. With the Maritimes as usual frozen into familial if not religious molds, with Quebec a captured fiefdom for the Grits, with the West now resentfully providing the same basking refuge for the Tories, it is southern Ontario and Toronto that hold the key. Toronto with 29 seats has more seats than all but two provinces. Conquer Toronto and the environmental riches of Ottawa — such as they are — are yours.

The city of the beloved Argonauts seems poised to punish at least four Trudeau cabinet ministers: Secretary of State for Cultchah John Roberts, Energy Minister Alistair Gillespie, Labor Minister Martin O'Connell, Small Business Minister Tony Abbott.

It is the city where financier Maurice Strong, having examined the entrails of the polls, decided he didn't want to run as a Liberal after all and abandoned his nomination. Where Dr. John Evans decided to take a two-year Rockefeller grant and fled to the U.S. instead. Where prominent feminist Doris Anderson declined — like Evans — to repeat her October byelection disaster.

"There's a strange thing," says a law professor, quoting a theory put about by critic Robert Fulford. "English-Canadians have discovered — after 11 years — that Pierre Trudeau is a French-Canadian. Rene Levesque may be to blame, but Trudeau is going to get the result at the polls."

A wise retired politician says, "I really think what English-Canadians need at this point is a poet who can express their soul. Whatever happens in Quebec, the PQ has established one thing. Francophones have complete confidence in those who speak for them — musicians, artists, whatever. We don't have anyone who can express our collective thoughts."

It's what, in consensus, bothers these otherwise sleek and content northern cousins of Bergdorf-Goodman. Pierre Trudeau has let go all those who might express the Holt Renfrew dream. Turner, Hellyer, Don Macdonald, Eric Kierans, even Bryce Mackasey.

There is now, at the cliff of his defeat, naught but the minipersonalities of the Otto Langs, the Tony Abbotts, the Hugh Faulkners, the endless nobodies who festoon the Anglo side of his front bench.

In Toronto, which admires success above all, there is frustration bordering on anger. Again and again, a reporter finds voters who foment that there must be something wrong with a system that offers as a choice only a Trudeau they want to throw out and a Clark they think not fit for the task. It is not for the reporter to suggest they are responsible for the distasteful choice.

Garlanding it all, spooking it all, is the spectre of Margaret, on every shopgirl's lips, an obvious buzz from every next table in a restaurant. She has, of course, within two chapters of the serialization of her Looney-in-Wonderland book, become a preserve of urban wit. (Today's mordant luncheon line was that Teddy Kennedy's office had issued a press release: "The Senator wishes he had just driven her home").

All it does is increase the frustration in the prime city that does not think it is being offered a fair choice.

The irony of Canada is that Toronto, the most materialistic city of all, is the most confused of all, waiting for a poet who doesn't exist.

Outcome for Quebec decided elsewhere

By WILLIAM JOHNSON
The Globe and Mail

QUEBEC — The federal election campaign looks to be unexciting in Quebec. It's not that the result will leave Quebec indifferent; far from it. On election night, Quebec could find itself practically unrepresented in a Progressive Conservative government elected by the rest of the country. That would be dramatic, perhaps traumatic. Or the Liberals could find themselves heading a minority government because of overwhelming support from Quebec, but with only a sprinkling of seats outside francophone ridings. That, too, could be dramatic.

There is a chance, too, that the election will be so close that it could be decided one way or the other by what happens to the 11 Quebec seats won by the Social Credit Party in 1974. They looked like easy pickings for the Liberals until a few weeks ago. But now, with Fabien Roy leaving the National Assembly to take up the Crediitiste leadership, the party is likely to give the Liberals a real fight for those seats.

All that is true, but it doesn't change the fact that the campaign is likely to be dull in Quebec, even if the outcome is not. From here, Quebec looks much like a territory held by a garrison, while the battles between armies are fought elsewhere. Unless there are unexpected uprisings during the campaign, Quebec will see little more than skirmishes in its outlying areas. It will wait, beleaguered, for its political fate to be decided in Ontario and British Columbia.

In 1974 the Liberals, with 54 per cent of the vote, took 60 of 74 seats, Social Credit took 11 and the Tories three. At dissolution, Social Credit was down to nine seats (two former members sit as independents), the Tories held two seats and there is one vacancy, the Dollard seat from which Liberal Jean-Pierrre Goyer resigned.

There is likely to be little change, unless the Liberal total goes up. The recent poll carried out for CBC showed 55 per cent of Quebecers either very or fairly satisfied with the federal government. (In the rest of Canada only 36 per cent were satisfied.) This level of satisfaction, which has held for the past year, suggests the Liberals could surge well beyond their current 60 seats.

What about the other parties? There was considerable elation among the ranks of the Parti Quebecois recently when it became clear that Fabien Roy, member of the National Assembly for the Parti National Populaire, was going to take over the leadership of the Social Credit Party. There was much optimistic speculation about the number of seats — as many as 25 — that would be taken by the Creditistes under the leadership of the popular Mr. Roy. There was even hope that it could lead to the defeat of Prime Minister Trudeau in a close election. Much of this is wishful thinking, as Lise Bissonnette argued in an editorial in Le Devoir.

I think the likely effectiveness of the Creditistes under Mr. Roy has been much exaggerated. I will be surprised if they get more than five seats.

It's difficult to tell, because the Creditiste vote has always been a protest vote. There is little Conservative and little Creditiste vote in Quebec. There is, rather, a Liberal vote and and anti-Liberal vote. The anti-Liberal vote goes to the Tories or the Creditistes, but it is not firmly tied to the one or the other. The Liberals are supreme in the big cities. The anti-Liberal vote is strong in the boondocks, in the semi-rural areas dependent on agriculture and low-wage, vulnerable industries such as textiles, furniture and shoes.

Will the anti-Liberal vote be high this time? I rather doubt it, both because of the "satisfaction" expressed in recent polls, and because the federal government acted in 1977 to impose quotas on imported textiles and clothing, thus protecting the vulnerable industries. These products in Quebec have surged recently, because of protection and because the sales tax was totally removed from them by the Quebec government.

Mr. Roy, very popular in his own riding, has never proved himself a miracle worker outside it — certainly no Real Caouette.

Moveover, Mr. Roy is known as a very strong nationalist. He has long been in favor of associate statehood for Quebec. He plans to have the Creditistes run on a strongly nationalist platform, and he hopes to win the unofficial support of the PQ machine.

WASHINGTON POST

Two men were killed a few days ago when the roof collapsed in the Scotia Coal Company's mine near Oven Fork, Ky. It's the same mine in which 26 men were killed three years ago. In this latest accident, a third miner was apparently saved by the protective canopy of the machine he was operating. The mining company has been contesting the rule requiring canopies.

A day earlier, and light years distant, the federal Nuclear Regulatory Commission had ordered five power reactors shut down. A design error had come to light, suggesting that some of the piping might not withstand a severe earthquake. How severe? Reactors are typically designed to survive the most powerful earthquake that might occur over a span of 10,000 years. The NRC is doubtless correct in thinking that the American public is intolerant of risk in reactors.

The cases of the coal mine and the reactors are tied together, of course, by the demand for electricity. Coal generates almost half of the nation's electric power, and nuclear reactors about one-eighth. In all matters concerning coal, the U.S. is comparatively relaxed about health and safety protection. But in everything that touches nuclear power, it is increasingly cautious. Americans are highly selective in their perceptions of risk.

Perhaps part of the explanation is that nuclear power is new, carrying with it unfamiliar and especially frightening new dangers and evoking new standards. Coal has been around for a long time and, though its costs to human life are large, they are familiar. Coal became part of our lives when people were poorer and life was cheaper. The usages established then still seem to influence attitudes today. It surprises no one that from time to time a mine should collapse and men die. Nor does it surprise anyone that, after ugly accidents, mines should reopen and men continue to work in them.

But, in terms of health hazards, mining coal is less dangerous than burning it. Statisticians have repeatedly shown that the air pollution resulting from coal-fired powered plants results in shortened life spans in the populations affected by it.

A nuclear reactor makes a small but measurable contribution to the radiation to which the public is exposed — another form of dangerous pollution. How does this hazard compare with that of coal? There have been many studies and, while the numbers are not precise, they demonstrate clearly that coal imposes a much greater cost to human health, perhaps 100 times as high — measured in terms of premature deaths.

The sudden shutdown of the five reactors reflects the financial caution that now characterizes nuclear regulation. Those reactors have been turned off at substantial inconvenience to the nation, in the midst of an oil shortage and at heavy costs to the customers. Not many people would want it otherwise. But it's curious to think that, if the same health standards were applied to coal and the power plants that burn it, half of the country would be dining by candlelight tonight — and not voluntarily.

'Our dirty little secret'

By ROBERT FULFORD
Toronto Star

Once I knew a millionaire art collector who claimed he wasn't interested in money. Well, what he actually claimed was that he wasn't interested in the financial side of art. One night at a party he condemned a leading critic's book on modern art because it set down the prices paid for recent paintings. "That's irrelevant," my millionaire said, sternly. "It has no place in a discussion of art."

Then his conversation moved to another topic. He was trying to obtain for his local museum a certain major painting. It was owned by an international dealer, and to get it the millionaire had to go through a complicated series of trades.

As he described this process, his conversation — normally sluggish — became charged with excitement. His eyes came to life. He described his wheeling and dealing in exquisite and loving detail. As he did so there shone through his words a sense of joy that never appeared when he talked about art itself. It was obvious to anyone listening that he loved money and commerce, and loved art most when it mixed with high finance. But he felt it was necessary to deny this passion, this crucial fact of his nature. It wasn't respectable.

He was living out the central conflict of social life, the conflict between what we should feel and what we do feel. Among the discontents of civilization there is nothing more agonizing than this permanent inner struggle. Probably there is not a single civilized individual who has not dealt with it in some way.

* * *

I thought of that millionaire the other day, when the world was suddenly filled with Margaret Trudeau gossip — interviews, sneak previews of her book, TV and radio items. Gossip is to our society what money was to that art collector. It is what everyone loves and everyone must pretend to hate. It is the dirty little secret of our time.

Within institutions as within individuals, gossip causes severe contradictions. The same newspapers that are paying large sums for Margaret Trudeau's revelations are also running articles indicating that this sort of thing is somehow beneath them. Sometimes the editors and publisher argue privately that they publish gossip because "the people" want it, leaving the clear implication that they themselves aren't interested. This implication is almost always a lie.

Newspapers began as gossip sheets, in the 18th century, and when they abandon gossip they abandon their heritage. There's not much chance that will happen in the foreseeable future, however. Right now there's more gossip publicly available than at any point in living memory.

Gossip is the art form of the '70s in the sense that light shows and psychedelic posters were the art forms of the '60s. Society has run out of ideas for its own development, and in many ways abandoned hope for its betterment. It turns naturally, then, to examining the secrets within it.

* * *

This provides limitless possibilities for self-righteousness, and almost everyone takes advantage of them. People magazine, for instance, gives everyone a journal to look on with scorn, as an earlier generation looked down on the Reader's Digest (for different reasons). It is important to maintain an anti-gossip point of view while reading (or passing on) gossip. A couple of years ago Garry Trudeau, in his Doonesbury strip, made it plain that People magazine was beneath contempt. Yet Doonesbury carries more gossip, about living persons, than any comic strip.

In the same way, it is important for all of us, in discussing the news stories about Pierre Trudeau's private life, to claim that this is not what we care about. Whatever we say on this issue must carry the clear implication that we care more about economic problems, regional disparity, and the constitution — especially the constitution — than about the marital problems of our prime minister. For the sake of our self-respect we must not let it be known that while the prime minister's speeches and policies bore us silly, his personality and everything connected with it are endlessly fascinating.

In time, of course, it will be all right to speculate on Trudeau's private life. Like most art forms, gossip becomes more respectable as it grows older. If you had written a detailed study of Mackenzie King's sex life in 1940 you would have been condemned as a sensationalist. If you write the same story in 1979 you will qualify as a historian. An article on William Faulkner's drunkenness might have been libel in 1950, but today it would be a contribution to literary history, publishable in the most elevated journals.

* * *

Some books are interesting only because they are disguised gossip (Harold Robbins' novels, for instance), and some public personalities are interesting only because of the gossip they generate (Jacqueline Onassis, for instance). Almost anyone who is gossiped about wants it that way. Mrs. Onassis could live a private life if she chose; she chooses otherwise, and this can only be because she likes the idea of people talking about her.

Margaret Trudeau, clearly, has decided to make scandal her profession. In the process she has provided employment for many journalists and publishers, and innocent pleasure for millions of people who read about her. How many traditional artists can claim as much? Certainly she's more effective as a scandal than as a photographer.

Malcolm Muggeridge, I think, said he would rather read gossip than political writing. Political writing is only about power, which is usually boring or depressing, while gossip has the advantage of being about people. Muggeridge is right. Gossip is what makes public life human. It reminds us that our leaders endure lives that are as chaotic as our own, lives that are in many ways as interesting as the lives we read about in novels.

A Cool Approach Helps Avert Theatre Clash

With opening of UVic Centre future of Royal Theatre (left) and McPherson Playhouse was cause for concern among officials of city-owned facilities

By AUDREY JOHNSON
Times Staff

Diplomacy, a candid approach and an objective viewpoint have averted a collision between Victoria's two publicly-owned theatres and the new University Centre auditorium.

When it was first known that the university campus was to be the site of a modern acoustically designed concert hall, community reaction was mostly enthusiastic

Not foreseen was the impact the new facility would have on the existing McPherson Playhouse and Royal Theatre — both supported from the same public purse that maintains the university.

Losses Hit $7,900

In the first three months alone, the McPherson Playhouse lost $7,900 in rentals to the university and the potential loss to the Mac after one year's operation of the University Centre was projected at about $16,000.

It was also clear that the Royal would suffer a serious revenue decline.

Attractions that were traditionally top revenue-makers for the Mac or the Royal, but which went instead to the University Centre, included the Irish Rovers, Long John Baldry, Bruce Cockburn, Carlos Montoya, Maneige, Valdy and Oscar Peterson.

When it appeared that a 10-day CBC radio festival scheduled for September and originally pencilled in for the Mac had been lost to the University Centre, skies over the Centennial Square theatre noticeably darkened.

The Mac's operating group, the non-profit McPherson Playhouse Foundation, found itself faced with a real threat of being forced back into the deficit situation from which the theatre had escaped following the foundation takeover.

Its then-president, Allan M. Purdy, and the Mac's executive director, John Dyck, recognized the University Centre facility was a fact of life with which they would have to cope. So they decided to meet the situation head on by getting together with UVic president Dr. Howard Petch.

Ald. Ron McKenzie, chairman of Victoria's cultural development committee and the Royal Theatre committee, and the foundation's John Goult (now president), a member of the Royal Theatre committee and former Oak Bay alderman, saw competition as probably inevitable but felt the university at the outset was competing on an unfair level; the rate structures for UVic Centre auditorium appeared signally lower.

The Mac's total package rental schedule contains various rates for free and paid events and different times of day. For evening events, in which the average ticket price is under $6, for example, the rate per occupied seat is $1.25; over $6 it goes to $1.50. In both cases there is a required minimum of 430 paid seats per performance, making the minimum rental $537.50.

The total package includes ushers, doormen, stage technician, use of all equipment and special services such as readograph, coming events schedule and lobby display.

Bought Argument

A UVic analysis of rentals to date indicates that while the basic rent of $500 appears to be lower than the Mac, it is only so if one anticipates filling at least 1,000 of the larger number of seats.

UVic's Petch, however, accepted the arguments of the downtown theatres' representatives as justifiable and not only tackled the subject of equalizing the rate structure, but in a series of exchanges with the CBC's George Laverock prevailed upon CBC to share the proposed schedule of festival performances between the UVic Centre and the Mac.

Goult was — and still is — adamant that the university should not in any sense compete with the downtown facilities.

"The university auditorium was presumably built to serve the university community primarily. Why are they competing at all?" he asks.

But impresario Allen Houghton, who was the first from off-campus to utilize the centre and has had several attractions there this season, feels UVic's competition was inevitable and could be foreseen.

"Why would they have built a facility of such superb quality and scope if it was not to be rented to community and other outside organizations?" he asks.

'Lost Initiative'

"Of course I would have liked to see that auditorium downtown as part of an arts complex," he adds. "But the community lost the initiative and the control to the university and now we have to live with it."

But Petch stresses the university's primary and exclusive function as an educational institution.

"Our needs relating to the auditorium will grow steadily," he says, "and they must come first."

Still, he is adamant that he will never permit UVic to monopolize its use to the entire exclusion of the community.

That will come as good news to the Victoria Symphony Society and Houghton who are planning partial seasons at the UVic centre as well as use of the downtown theatres for 1979-80 and the forseeable future.

Remove Incentive

Changes in the UVic rate structure, based on a study of the Mac's total package, will be in effect in the near future, says David Titterton, University Centre manager.

"What we are doing is attempting to remove any financial incentive toward use of the University Centre. At the moment we are telling people who inquire to budget on the basis of $1.50 per occupied seat. We intend to have a half-house rate as well as a whole-house rate with occupied seat minimums on both counts."

With a first season in the new auditorium completed, analysis indicates a kind of natural justice will prevail in future use of Greater Victoria's three major concert-theatre centres.

Petch and Titterton both feel the new rate structure at UVic will have the effect of directing events to the appropriate houses.

"Newness was a factor in attracting promoters and public to the University Centre," says Petch, "but the newness is wearing off, apart from which we now have the experience of operating it which we lacked at the beginning."

Titterton says business may have been attracted from the Mac because promoters gambled on filling the University Centre to its capacity of 1,275 seats, which would make the Centre cheaper for them than the Mac. Experience has shown that the gamble did not pay off except in two instances.

Only Two Sellouts

In a listing of 12 outside events in October-November, only two, Hagood Hardy and Bruce Cockburn, sold out. All others except symphony concerts could have been comfortably housed at less cost in the 837-seat Mac.

Houghton says the principal feedback he has received from the several events he booked into the University Centre, all of which would have done better at the Mac, has been concerned with an inconvenience of access for the middle-aged and older patrons who make up a bulk of Victoria audiences. It especially affects those who don't drive at night.

"People simply haven't been going there in the numbers most of us anticipated," he says.

As for the Symphony, even though University Centre's acoustics are unquestionably ideal from the perfectionist's viewpoint, and even if the contemplated 12 pairs of 1979-80 concerts could be accommodated there, it is unlikely the board would entertain complete removal to UVic.

Apart from being a question of bad policy diplomatically and businesswise, audience majority opinion favors a return to the Royal for reasons similar to those Houghton has experienced.

Meanwhile, Purdy and McKenzie have both expressed satisfaction with the resolution of the problem.

"Howard (Dr. Petch) has demonstrated a genuine responsibility to the community," says Purdy. "He has not only been willing to tackle our problem but has demonstrated a sincere spirit of co-operation and come up with positive action."

Says McKenzie: "A basis has been provided for the cultural explosion I am sure is upon us."

His words are echoed by Houghton who also sees a floodtide in the arts on its way.

McKenzie sees the Royal soon coming under the umbrella of the McPherson Playhouse Foundation, whose name might then possibly be changed to Victoria Theatre Foundation.

"The Foundation has been so phenomenally successful in its operation of the McPherson, turning it from a liability to an asset," he says, "that it is only common sense to extend its management to the other municipally-owned theatre."

First for Victoria

"Victoria was definitely the first city in the Pacific Coast area to make that move. It's a first we owe to Allan Purdy who originated the idea and has steered it successfully through its initial three years," says McKenzie.

As far as the Royal is concerned, its popularity is likely to increase soon if a recent government "approval-in-principle" is adopted and agreed upon by the three owner-municipalities. The move will see the 66-year-old Royal receive something beyond the present cosmetic treatment. A new spacious foyer and other structural developments are on the drawing board.

No Conflict Here

A new building for the University of Victoria theatre department is awaiting final government approval.

The Universities Council has already given the plan its recommendation.

The fact that the building plans are known to include two small theatres gave rise to some misgiving on the part of the McPherson Foundation members.

UVic president Dr. Howard Petch, however, scotched rumors that the theatres would work out to be of a size that would make them attractive to outside renters.

"They are learning theatres, not performing theatres," he emphasizes. "Each theatre — one is to be a proscenium style and the other thrust-stage to give students experience in both kinds of production — will have only 200 seats. There is no way that I will agree to them becoming any larger."

Before the Judge

A three-day preliminary hearing into drug charges ended abruptly in provincial court Thursday when two of four men re-elected their trial method and entered guilty pleas.

Judge Fred Green sentenced 24-year-old Murray Steven Whyte, of 926 Urquhart in Courtenay, to 30 days in jail after a guilty plea to conspiracy to traffic in cocaine.

Whyte, 23-year-old Darrell Edward Nolan, of 1574 Bay in Victoria, 25-year-old Jeffrey George Martin, of 2648 Graham in Victoria, and 24-year-old Clifford Robert Barker, of 791 Braidwood in Courtenay, were jointly charged with conspiracy to traffic in cocaine and trafficking in the drug between Nov. 17 and Dec. 12, 1977, in Courtenay and Saanich.

Nolan also re-elected trial by magistrate and pleaded guilty to trafficking in cocaine. He was remanded until Wednesday for sentencing by Green.

Crown counsel Malcolm Macaulay entered stays of proceedings against Martin and Barker.

The conspiracy charge was in connection with an arrangement to buy a half-pound of cocaine from two undercover drug squad policemen from Vancouver.

Nolan pleaded guilty in connection with the actual delivery of two ounces of the drug to the agents on Dec. 11, 1977, at the Red Lion Inn.

Evidence heard during the preliminary hearing was that Whyte had a conversation with the officers in a Courtenay washroom regarding the purchase of the cocaine for $16,000.

Prior to passing sentence, Green told Whyte he found the reasons given for the activity "incongruous and difficult to understand."

While disagreeing with defence counsel Douglas Christie's suggestion of a suspended sentence and probation, Green said he imposed the minimal sentence after taking into account the unusual circumstances of the case.

Whyte had been convicted last Aug. 21 in what was described as "confidence buys" of trafficking in MDA, marijuana and cocaine and was given a 90-day intermittent sentence in Courtenay by county court Judge Leslie Cashman. Green accepted the suggestion that it was a continuing series of offences for which Whyte had already been jailed.

Macaulay said he took a "moderate" stance on the sentencing because Whyte had already served some time for the series of offences, the staleness of the charge which was in no way due to Whyte or his lawyer, Whyte's previously unblemished record and the "amateurish" way in which the whole transaction was conducted.

Two young men who were found in a fourth-floor stairwell of a Fairfield apartment building Thursday morning were given suspended sentences and ordered by Judge Blake Allan to perform 25 hours of community service work each.

David Michael Lavellee, 19, of 1100 Burnside West, and Terry Rhodes, 20, of 310 Roberts, pleaded guilty to a joint charge of loitering at night.

Crown counsel Robert Mulligan said the pair gained entry to the apartment block at 950 Rockland by telling a resident through an intercom system that they lost their keys. Victoria city police were called and at 12:30 a.m. found the pair in the stairwell on the fourth floor. They told police they had been drinking and needed a place to stay.

Michael Ellingson, 18, of 1225 Clarke, was charged with eight counts of breaking and entering vessels moored at Brentwood Bay on March 27.

He was remanded until next Thursday for election of his trial method.

Computer Sellers Beat Path to Smaller Firms

TORONTO (CP) — Computer suppliers have begun directing their sales pitches to companies with annual revenues under $1 million.

"Computer suppliers directed most of their marketing effort in the past at companies with between $1 million and $5 million in annual revenue," says Ronald Evans, president of R. W. Evans Research Corp. of Toronto.

"But future growth will come from businesses that do less than $1 million in revenue a year."

He said more than 65,000 businesses in Canada have sales between $250,000 and $1 million and that less than 10 per cent of these have computers or use share facilities with other companies.

Until recently, computer manufacturers were reluctant to supply software programming when they sold a computer because the hardware, the system itself, was much more lucrative.

Companies that bought the hardware had to work out their own programs, which was expensive.

That is changing now, says Evans, as manufacturers are beginning to sell package deals that include general programs for broad applications.

Mini-computers and small business computers are the machines being pushed to moderate-sized businesses, says Evans.

Mini-computers cost between $5,000 and $50,000 and small business computers between $40,000 and $150,000.

Evans said it is best not to spend less than $20,000 if you want a good system.

He also suggested prospective buyers look closely at the capabilities of the computer they are buying, to avoid later expense.

Expected growth in business also should be considered in deciding on the type of computer bought, and it is useful to get one that can be upgraded without having to rewrite programs.

"You should expect that whatever you buy will be obsolete in five years in terms of technology," said Evans.

Prices of mini and small computers are falling rapidly as the technology becomes more efficient and economical.

Evans predicted prices would continue to decline by 10 to 20 per cent annually for the next five years.

Sales of the machines are expected to total about $150 million across the country this year.

George Weston

Increased profits in George Weston Ltd.'s resource-based subsidiaries helped the company report a 72-per-cent increase in profits during 1978, the company said.

In a preliminary report to shareholders, it said operating profits were $4.06 a share last year compared with $2.36 a share in 1977.

The forest products division showed the greatest improvement in operating income with $22.2 million on sales of $265.1 million in 1978 compared with $1.6 million on sales of $212.5 million the previous year.

The fisheries division reported an operating profit of $30.6 million on sales of $284.8 million last year compared with $21.4 million on sales of $238.5 million in 1977.

Versatile

Versatile Cornat Corp. has reported net earnings of $10,575,000 or $1.76 a share for 1978, compared to net earnings of $5,651,000 or $1.08 a share the previous year.

Consolidated revenues amounted to $303,037,000 compared to $244,685,000 in 1977.

Company chairman Peter Saunders said the results reflected an improvement in the results of subsidiaries Versatile Manufacturing Co. and Bralorne Resources Ltd. Company shipyards and cold storage warehouses were also strong contributors, he said.

M-F Ltd.

Massey Ferguson Ltd. reported net earnings of $13 million in the first quarter of this fiscal year, reversing a trend of ever-increasing losses that left it $257 million in the red last year.

Victor Rice, president of the Toronto-based farm machinery conglomerate, told the annual shareholders' meeting "the net income is one of the highest we have achieved in the first quarter, a quarter that historically is low in terms of sales and earnings."

Company chairman Conrad Black noted that debt restrictions will not allow dividends to be paid until the company has accumulated net income of $265 million. He added no dividends can be paid on common shares until arrears on preferred shares have been paid.

Asked when payments on common shares would resume, Black said "I cannot specifically answer that question now."

Rice attributed the economic turnaround to "action programs" including reduction of inventories and a sharp reduction in losses in the company's construction machinery operations.

Bank CN

Bank Canadian National reports that its assets stood at $8.3 billion as of Jan. 31, 1979, compared with $6.96 billion a year earlier, an increase of 19.1 per cent.

In its quarterly report, the bank said its total revenue for the first three months ended Jan. 31 was $216 million, compared with $157 million for the corresponding period in 1978.

However, after-tax balance of revenue for the first three months of fiscal 1979 dropped to $5,050,375 from $6,133,419 for the first quarter of fiscal 1978.

The bank attributed the decline in earnings to successive increases in interest rates on deposits which were not fully offset by weaker growth in loan volume. It said there was also a lower profit margin on a large mortgage loans portfolio in the first quarter of fiscal 1979.

"We are of the opinion that a drop in interest rates, projected for the second quarter, will enable us to show increased profitability during the financial year," the bank said.

Kelly, Douglas

Kelly, Douglas and Co. Ltd. reports net earnings of $11,606,000 or $1.83 a share for the year ended Dec. 30, 1978, compared with $9,848,000 or $1.56 a share in 1977.

Sales for the food distribution company reached $1,171,327,000 in 1978, compared with $1,027,088,000 in 1977.

The 1978 net earnings include extraordinary income of $966,000, compared with extraordinary income of $245,000 in 1977, both resulting from income tax reductions and gain on sale of subsidiary companies.

Kelly, Douglas holdings include 109 supermarkets, 38 grocery warehouses, 21 cash and carry warehouses, a dairy, an egg-grading plant, a meat-cutting plant, an importing business and an institutional coffee and tea distribution company.

Trans Mountain

Trans Mountain Pipe Line Co. Ltd. has declared net earnings of $4,930,686 or 65 cents a share for the year ended Dec. 31, 1978, compared with net earnings of $5,912,398 or 78 cents a share in 1977.

Income for 1978 was $30,640,586 compared with $31,041,648 the previous year.

K. L. Hall, president and chairman of the board, said the company will continue to experience reduced earnings if the National Energy Board does not amend its method of determining tolls for the company's shipment of oil.

He said the method, which the company is challenging in the Federal Court of Canada, is not designed for companies like Trans Mountain, which provide transportation only and are not selling or buying the product.

Cominco

Cominco Ltd. has reported net earnings for 1978 of $65.2 million or $3.46 a share, compared with $62.2 million or $3.43 a share in 1977.

Cominco said in its annual report that sales were $901.2 million, compared with $759.2 million the previous year.

It said that base metal markets were recovering from the oversupply situation which has prevailed since 1975 and markets for zinc and lead improved in the second half of 1978.

The company said that its major expansion and modernization program for metallurgical plants at Trail, B.C. and the Sullivan mine at Kimberley, B.C. was proceeding on schedule and by the end of 1978 more than $170 million had been committed to the project.

Fording Plans Expansion

CALGARY (CP) — Fording Coal Ltd. says it plans a $15-million expansion of its metallurgical coal operatios in southeastern British Columbia.

The board of directors of the Calgary-based company, owned by Canadian Pacific Investments Ltd. and Cominco Ltd., has approved the $15-million budget for new equipment and underground mine development at its mine north of Elkford.

"The budget, one of the largest in recent years, is the first step in a major program by Fording to develop additional coal sales," the company said.

G. L. Bingleman, finance vice-president, said in an interview that fording still is talking to potential new customers and contacts have been encouraging.

Work is expected to start immediately on upgrading the Elkford mine.

Acrylic Yarn Touted

LONDON (CP) — A British yarn manufacturer has developed an acrylic textile yarn featuring what is believed to be the highest strength and stretch capacity ever achieved in the industry.

The development is the result of a two-year, $24-million research program conducted by the Thomas Burnley Co., Britain's second largest producer of worsted hosiery yarns.

The Cleckheaton, West Yorkshire, firm will not disclose details of the development, but says it has found a shortcut in the processing method required to turn raw fibre into finished yarn.

The super yarn, called New-Tec, is being sold in production-dyed form in Britain at lower prices than for conventional and imported yarn. It will be offered to textile manufacturers throughout Europe before the end of the year.

Kinnaird Veto On TV Debate

Jim Kinnaird, president of the B.C. Federation of Labor, has no intention of taking part in a TV debate with Premier Bill Bennett, the federation office said Thursday.

Kinnaird, currently on holidays, said through secretary-treasurer Dave MacIntyre that the premier's challenge to take on NDP leader Dave Barrett, former party cabinet minister Bob Williams and Kinnaird in a debate is cheap politics.

MacIntyre said Bennett should stand up in front of the 112,000 unemployed in the province and explain why his government hasn't done anything for them.

Bennett tossed out the TV challenge Tuesday night when he announced the May 10 election. He said Williams is still a power in the NDP backrooms and Bennett has claimed recently that Kinnaird is the real NDP leader.

Williams, resources minister during the NDP government from 1972 to 1975, has said he isn't interested in debating with the premier.

Barrett says he will debate the issues with Bennett but on a one-to-one basis.

Been Done Before, Stephens Hopeful

B.C. '79

Conservative leader Vic Stephens kicked off his provincial election campaign Thursday by saying he expects his party to form the goverment after the May 10 vote.

"It's been done before in this province," said Stephens, referring to W. A. C. Bennett's meteoric rise to power in 1952 as the head of the Social Credit party. "And, we can do it again."

Stephens told an Independent Businessman's Association meeting in Burnaby that a Conservative government would reduce taxes in the province by $1 billion, by eliminating the provincial sales tax and removing all school taxes from property.

He said it is time for government in B.C. to "turn in on itself and cut costs."

Stephens pointed to the housing and economic development ministries as $40 million and $30 million departments that can be eliminated with little loss of valuable service.

"The only way to do it is to cut off the money supply. You have to just tell the ministers they'll have to hold the line on their budgets or cut back."

Stephens said there is fat in all parts of government which can be trimmed. However, he said he would not reduce service to the "truly needy" and indicated he would likely increase the budget for health care in B.C.

The 47-year-old Conservative leader blasted the Social Credit party, calling it the "biggest spending government in the history of B.C."

"They've added $1 1-2 billion to the budget since they took over from the NDP three-and-a-half years ago."

Stephens also called the budget brought down by the government a day before the election call a "dead duck," and said the goverment was trying to mislead the public by saying the budget is only five per cent above last year's.

He said it is much closer to 10 per cent if the $220 million the budget proposed to hand out is taken into account.

In a wide-ranging speech, Stephens also predicted that the government's plan to giveaway free shares in the B.C. Resources Investment Corp. will cost about $20 million — $5 million more than the government claims it will cost — and described himself as the only politician willing to take the right stand on the Fort Nelson extension of the B.C. Railway.

Stephens said he would shut down the extension and pay off the $700 million debt the railway has incurred.

Bennett's Resources Plan Flayed

NDP leader Dave Barrett Thursday delivered a stinging rebuke to Premier Bill Bennett's resources policies.

At a lengthy press conference in Victoria, Barrett warned if the Socreds are returned to power they will dismantle the B.C. Petroleum Corporation.

The BCPC is the marketing agency for B.C.'s natural gas.

Revenues from gas sales through B.C. Petroleum bring in more money to the provincial coffers than the sale of liquor, Barrett said.

But Bennett will dismantle it, ensuring those millions in revenues will fall back into the hands of private corporations, the former premier charged.

"I believe the premier is embarking on a program to dismantle the petroleum corporation," he said.

Barrett says he would like to see the B.C. system expanded nationally to give strength in dealing with the huge multi-nationals like Exxon and Standard Oil.

He said the main election issues are going to be unemployment, cost of living, and loss of some democratic control over resources in the province.

Without provincial regulations, gasoline will rise to $1.25 a gallon in 14 months, he predicted and home heating fuel costs are rising out of sight.

Barrett says when he was premier he went after Ottawa to increase the export price of natural gas from 64 cents per 1,000 cubic feet and to pressure the federal government, he promised he would turn over one-third of every cent after $1 to the municipalities in the province.

He soon got $1.45, and then $1.96 rates. One-third of the amount over $1 still goes to the municipalities in resources grants. The federal government takes a third, and the province the other third.

The Socreds could use that kind of pressure on Ottawa to bump the price to equal the $3.20 charged by Mexico.

Barrett also said Bennett has dropped the Canadian-only eligibility requirement for buying shares in the B.C. Resources Investment Corp.

The bill that was introduced in the house just before the legislature dissolved Tuesday would allow non-Canadians to purchase shares in BCRIC in later issues once the B.C.-only deadline passes June 15.

Barrett says an NDP government would not allow non-Canadians to buy into the province's resources corporation.

Special Booths for Voters

Provincial election voters whose names were missed during the September-March enumeration have until Wednesday to register.

Deputy electoral officer Bob Patterson said today special booths have been set up in shopping and civic centres, pharmacies and community halls to register eligible voters' names up to the April 11 cutoff date.

Bennett Pushes Radio-TV Rules

Premier Bill Bennett said Thursday he believes there should be more provincial regulation of broadcasting in B.C. but said changes would not come without extensive consultation with the business.

Bennett, speaking to the Kelowna convention of the B.C. Association of Broadcasters, told 200 delegates he does not know why the country's broadcasters have opposed increased provincial regulation.

"We realize that we must move cautiously and we must move responsibly and we won't take any steps without consultation," he said.

"It is not yet exactly clear to us why you view provincial regulations with such alarm," he added, suggesting that the fears reflect a certain amount of confusion among broadcasters.

That is why the government plans consultations with the broadcasters before implementing changes, he said.

He urged the broadcasters to make their views known to the government, especially any fears of increased competition or of added responsibilities.

Provincial broadcast regulations are very much at the talking stage, said Bennett. "And we hope to begin a dialogue with you on the subject."

But the premier told the delegates that his government would bring in changes and the industry should not resist them or just do nothing and think the proposals will just go away.

It is essential that some mechanism be found to ensure local input into existing public control of broadcasting, he added.

New Pact at UBC

VANCOUVER (CP) — About 1,400 members of the Association of University and College Employees at the University of British Columbia have voted overwhelmingly to accept a new contract agreement.

The one-year contract provides a seven-per-cent wage increase. Base rates were not available.

A union spokesman said the contract includes a clause which allows for evaluation reports of the clerical workers to be removed from university files after two years. Previous policy was to keep files indefinitely.

The contract also changes the university hiring policy to provide hiring on a seniority basis.

The union also represents 650 employees who have been on strike at Simon Fraser since February.

NDP Leading in Nominations

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Social Credit party might not have a winner yet in Nanaimo riding in the May 10 provincial election but it has a Humble politician.

Tom Humble, a district manager for B.C. Hydro, will seek the seat held in the last house by Dave Stupich of the New Democratic Party.

Humble, who gained national fame in 1961 when he survived a plane crash in northeastern B.C. by crawling through snow for three days while suffering from broken ribs, a punctured lung and frozen feet, is one of 57 candidates nominated for 57 seats by four parties.

So far, his political life has not been successful. He was defeated in previous tries for school board and regional district board.

The NDP leads in nominations, which close April 26, with 37 candidates. Social Credit has 11, the Progressive Conservatives have nominated eight and Maurice Rush, who is running in Vancouver Centre, is the only Communist nominated.

The Liberals under leader Jev Tothill have not nominated any candidates but spokesmen for all parties say many nominating meetings are planned for next week.

Among the prominents nominated is Jack Davis, who will be trying to regain his seat in North Vancouver-Seymour after he resigned when charged with fraud involving government airline tickets last year.

Davis, a former federal fisheries minister and transport minister in Premier Bill Bennett's cabinet until the charge, involving cashing in first-class tickets for economy and pocketing the difference, was fined $1,000 for fraud involving $1,074.

Davis took the North Vancouver-Seymour seat by defeating Colin Gabelmann of the NDP who has resurfaced in the new riding of Island North this time around.

Former federal members of Parliament are running provincially for the NDP.

Stuart Leggatt, former federal member for New Westminster, is contesting Coquitlam-Moody, a new riding created under redistribution which increased the number of seats to 57 from 55.

Frank Howard, a onetime federal MP for Skeena, will contest that seat provincially. It was held by Cyril Shelford of Social Credit in the last house.

Two NDP members of the last house are running in different ridings after the Vancouver Burrard seats they held were eliminated by redistribution.

Rosemary Brown has switched to Burnaby-Edmonds while Norm Levi is contesting the new riding of Coquitlam-Maillardville.

At least four other NDP candidates who were defeated in the last election will be trying again.

Carl Liden, who was made transport minister one month before the 1975 election was called, will try to avenge his defeat in Delta at the hands of Walter Davidson.

James Lorimer, municipal affairs minister in the NDP administration of Dave Barrett, will be trying again to win in Burnaby-Willingdon. He was defeated in 1975 by Elwood Veitch, minister of tourism and small business.

Corliss Miller, who lost to Don Phillips of Social Credit in 1975, will again try to capture Peace River South for the NDP.

Harold Steves will be trying to regain the Richmond seat he lost in the NDP defeat in 1975 to Jim Nielsen, minister of consumer and corporate affairs.

Forces' Pensions Deplored

VANCOUVER (CP) — Retired Canadian servicemen are given pensions amounting to less than what most people receive on welfare, a former Canadian army officer said Thursday.

Jock Shields, national chairman of the Canadian Armed Forces pensioners' committee, said retired personnel are given an average of about $3,300 a year, while provinces pay welfare recipients about $1,000 annually.

Rights Group Attack 'Unfair'

The chairman of B.C. Human Rights Commission says it was unfair of a critic to attack some of the members on the basis of banter at their first Victoria meeting Tuesday.

A published report of the meeting gave too much emphasis to off-the-cuff remarks of commissioners under pressure of a day-long meeting, said Margaret Strongitharm of Nanaimo. At the same time, their accomplishments were ignored.

Members of the recently-formed commission appeared ignorant of their role and showed an appalling attitude toward matters involving human rights, said observer Norrie Preston, who attended much of the meeting. She is a member of the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women committee on human rights.

She said little was achieved amid a male-dominated atmosphere she likened to a boys' locker room.

"They just sat there and joked and jocked around. I couldn't believe it. It was just an old boys' club.

"Surely the government could have appointed people who were familiar with human rights legislation. These people have been there six months and they still aren't," Preston said.

She and a newspaper reporter were the only members of the public attending, although regular meetings — held monthly — are open. Preston said the commission does not advertise its meetings.

Strongitharm said meetings held the second Tuesday of each month are usually held in Richmond, the most convenient place for members from various part of the province. The public is welcome, she said.

Commissioner Joe Katz, one of 10 attending the Victoria meeting, said his colleagues appeared not to take their role seriously; another said some were unaware.

Ron Jeffels chided the others for not getting down to serious business, and chairman Strongitharm had difficulty keeping order as members exchanged asides and witticisms having sexual bias.

In one significant move, the meeting voted by a wide margin to require human rights branch director Kathleen Ruff to be responsible to the commission.

Her role, which predates the commission, is to enforce the Human Rights Code for the minister of labor, a function separate from the commission.

Jock Smith said Ruff had been irresponsible in allowing public statements like criticizing the government for insufficient spending on education and lack of concern for human rights.

Members dealt in camera with a move to require Ruff to get their approval before recommending boards of inquiry to Labor Minister Allan Williams, commissioner Harry Crosby said later.

Some of the comments passed by members included the suggestion, amid laughter, that the commission set up a "take-a-gay-to-lunch day," and when the Devonshire Hotel was put forward as a meeting place April 27, Ted Pearce remarked: "That's good. That's were all the girls are."

He said later men should have the right to "throw them (women reporters) the hell out" of locker rooms.

Strongitharm said commissioners were still in the time-consuming process of learning how to function, particularly when meetings are widely separated.

"With a dozen people there are different perceptions, and there are those with more experience with human rights issues. There are different points of view."

As part of the process of establishing its mandate, the commission will meet soon with the minister "to iron out some of the things that are bothering them," she said.

One of the things is lack of staff to research issues.

Pickets Follow Trucks

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — Four trucks that entered the strike-bound Endako mine near Fraser Lake Thursday were surrounded by a picket line after they drove 140 kilometres to this city.

About 600 workers, members of the Canadian Association of Industrial, Mechanical and Allied Workers, have been on strike at the molybdenum mine since Feb. 16 after contract talks stalled over the issue of wages.

They were provided with an RCMP escort but some strikers followed the trucks here where they stopped to refuel.

The strikers immediately set up pickets around the trucks, but the convoy later left here bound for Alberta.

A union spokesman said the incident appeared to be an attempt by the company to provoke the strikers and thereby win an injunction against the pickets.

Management personnel have kept the mine in full operation since the strike began.

ESSO ECONOBLUE: THE NEW LITTLE FURNACE THAT CAN SAVE A LOT OF FUEL.

The new Esso Econoblue takes up only 3½ square feet of floor space. Yet it is designed for maximum fuel economy.

This oil-fired, forced air system uses a better mixture of air and oil vapour for more complete combustion. And because the mixture is also recycled, you get more heat out of every drop of oil.

If your old furnace works at 66% efficiency, for example, Econoblue could reduce oil consumption by 20%. This means if you now use 750 gallons of fuel a year, Econoblue could save you 150 gallons.

So, if your furnace has been showing signs of age lately, don't wait until it gives up altogether.

Tuba Gets a Chance to Really Shine

That attractive, deep-throated and sometimes humorous instrument, the tuba, will be highlighted Saturday in a recital to be given at the recital hall of the University of Victoria music building at 2:30 p.m.

This recital will combine the tuba with piano and the artists are Eugene Dowling on the big brass and Edward Norman at the keyboard. Dowling is tubist with the Victoria Symphony and instructor of tuba at in the UVic School of Music. He holds degrees from Michigan State and Northwestern Universities, and has appeared in several recitals and orchestra concerts as a soloist.

Norman, a familiar and admired organist and pianist in this city, is also an instructor in music at UVic.

Saturday's recital will feature works both written for and transcribed for the tuba. Among the works specifically written are a concerto by Ralph Vaughan Williams; a work entitled Exchange for Tuba and Piano, by Morris Knight; Serenade for Solo Tuba by Vincent Persichetti and Sonate for Tuba and Piano by Hindemith.

Transcriptions include Schumann's Fantasie-Stucke Op.73, and Sonata II in E flat major by J.S.Bach.

Tonight at 8 in the recital hall a free admission recital will be given by UVic student pianist, Yvette Liem. Works by Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Liszt, Rachmaninof, Debussy and Morawetz will be performed.

Warm Welcome For Winnipeg Ballet In U.S.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (CP) — The Royal Winnipeg ballet received a warm welcome Thursday, presenting a four-part program to an enthusiastic audience.

The ballet, here as part of the annual Birmingham Festival of the Arts, was the highlight of a three-day finale to the festival which began last week.

The audience of about 1,200, including Peter Towe, Canadian ambassador to the U.S., warmly applauded the company's efforts.

The program ranged from classical — George Balanchine's Sylvia Pas de Deux — to the modern — Igor Stravinsky's Rite of Spring. But the highlight, which won the longest applause, was a piece entitled Rodeo choreographed by Agnes de Mille.

The latter is a selection which runs the gamut from square dancing to tap dancing. Kathleen Duffy won the hearts of the audience as the tom-boy ranch girl who fails to catch the ladies' man and settles for the tap dancer.

The varied selection was made by the festival itself.

Salvatore Aiello, one of the ballet's associate artistic directors, said the company offered the festival a choice of six or seven pieces.

"It's probably the most varied program we have," he said. "It's very representative of the company."

The performance came within a hair's breadth of falling through at the last moment because of an airline strike in the U.S., Aiello said.

"The orchestra couldn't get out of Toronto, they only just managed to get down about 6 p.m."

The musicians and the dancers could not even squeeze in a rehearsal before the performance.

Despite that, comments from the audience afterward were full of praise for the Canadian company's work.

Today, the festival, which this year is honoring Canada, features art exhibitions, poetry readings and will be highlighted by a formal dinner for the ambassador.

Sitcoms Aim at Lowest IQ to Bag Highest Rating: Newhart

By VERNON SCOTT
United Press International

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Bob Newhart had one more year to go — his seventh — on his situation comedy last year when he balked at yet another season, walking away without a backward glance.

The soft-sell comedian had good reason for folding The Bob Newhart Show and has no regrets.

"I could see what was coming in situation comedy and I didn't want to be a part of it," he said.

"If we'd gone another year, they'd have had a guy and two girls living in the apartment above us, a Martian living on the same floor next door to three girl detectives. The floor below us would have been occupied by a fraternity and a sorority.

"That way we'd have had all the elements of what passes for a hit sitcom this year.

"But I wouldn't know how to write or play for the kind of audience that is attracted by these shows. Actually, I tried to leave the series a year earlier.

"I saw a slight slackening in the writing which scared me a little bit. I didn't want to limp off the air with a show that didn't measure up to what it had been three or four years earlier.

"Television series are like the stock market. There's room for bears and bulls but no room for pigs. If we'd tried to milk another year out of the series, we'd have wound up with a pig."

Newhart, who expected to rest during the past year, spent some 20 weeks making personal appearances around the country and a six-week stint in Las Vegas. During his travels he was stopped frequently by persons asking him to bring his series back to the air.

Most of them were adults who lamented the fact that only Barney Miller among comedy shows made a pretense of appealing to adult viewers. The rest were clearly aimed at children.

The Newhart series, which wasn't all that subtle and sophisticated, was lost on Laverne & Shirley viewers and jiggle show addicts.

Newhart thinks writers and producers have been instructed by the networks to aim at the lowest possible intelligence quotient in the land to reach the mass audience and capture the highest ratings.

Like other quality performers, Newhart is victimized by the ratings. Network revenue depends almost solely on the Nielsen numbers game. Quantity, not quality, is the name of the game.

"I suspect producers have got the word to go for unsophisticated comedy with a laugh track," he said. "I have nothing to base that on, except it's more than coincidence that there are so many mindless, poorly done situation comedies on the air."

"I don't think viewers can be blamed. The public doesn't know what it wants until it sees a show on the air. Producers are like guys throwing oatmeal at the walls — whatever sticks stays on."

Things Go Better for Dotty West and Her Greybeard

NASHVILLE (AP) — Dottie West — the picture of country sunshine and a bottle of pop — feels younger performing with a "greybeard" like Kenny Rogers.

Her steady, sedate career has skyrocketed in the past year since teaming up with Rogers and adding a flash of country charisma to the sensual but relaxed Rogers and his famous grey beard.

"I feel more confident and happy in what I'm doing," said Miss West, best known for her tune Country Sunshine which beeame the jingle for Coca-Cola.

"I married young and had four kids. I felt older while they were young. But I feel younger than ever and have more energy. When you are happy, you have more energy."

She joins Rogers, the Oak Ridge Boys and special guest Ray Charles on a television special, A Special Kenny Rogers, to be broadcast next Thursday.

Miss West, 46, says the past year has been meaningful.

"I've found the real me," she said in her backstage dressing room after taping portions of the special at the Grand Ole Opry House. "I am country, but I want to be treated with class. I like first class, and Kenny's that.

"He's certainly been a great boost to me, not only with audiences and record sales, but this has put me in good management hands. I'm no longer a $1,500-a-night singer. I'm in nice places for great money."

Rogers is an early favorite for the Country Music Association's entertainer of the year award, and the bubbly Miss West says he deserves it.

"I will be surprised and disappointed if he isn't entertainer of the year. I see crowds he plays to, I know nobody is deserving like Kenny."

The duo just completed a month's tour, and officials withdrew advertising as the tour began because ticket sales were so brisk the promotion was unnecessary.

Scurrilous RCMP Tags Rapped

OTTAWA (CP) — Former solicitor-general Warren Allmand testified Thursday that he took steps to tighten up language used in RCMP security service reports when he found terms such as Communist, homosexual and influence-peddling being used loosely.

Defending his four years in the portfolio, Allmand told a royal commission into RCMP wrongdoing that he soon became concerned about four areas of security service operation after he took the job in late 1972.

They were:

—The broad definition the RCMP gave the word "subversion." Allmand handed the royal commission a list of groups the RCMP had targetted as subversive but he regarded as legitimate. He said a 1975 mandate given the service by the federal cabinet more closely defined subversion.

—The way security clearances were handled. Neighbors of a man being cleared for a promotion thought he was being investigated as a subversive or criminal as a result of questions asked them by the security service.

—The way information was interpreted in files. When a lawyer made a legitimate call to Allmand, the RCMP referred to it in a file as "an attempt at influence-peddling." In another file, a person was described as a homosexual because he or she had shared a residence with two other people, one a homosexual, and a Communist because he or she had belonged to a left-wing organization in the 1950s. Both files were corrected and Allmand said he emphasized the need for accurate use of words.

—Withholding of information from Canadians because it resulted from co-operative efforts with the FBI and Central Intelligence Agency (CIA). Allmand said Canadians simply had friends in the United States get the same information the RCMP refused them from the FBI or CIA. This was "ridiculous."

Allmand said the use of writs of assistance and other warrants was referred to the Law Reform Commission of Canada for study as a result of mistakes the RCMP made in drug raids. He mentioned cases in Ottawa and London, Ont., in which raids had been made on the wrong homes as a result of mixed-up names.

He appointed Rene Marin, a provincial court judge, to look into the way the RCMP handled public complaints and internal discipline. The result was a report that recommended a number of changes, some of which he said have already been made by the force.

He said he tried to get W. L. Higgitt, who retired as commissioner in 1973, to allow married men to join the RCMP but Higgitt wouldn't change this policy. However, at Allmand's request, the next commissioner, Maurice Nadon, made the change.

Allmand was appointed Indian affairs minister Sept. 14, 1976, and now is consumer affairs minister. He said he learned of widespread RCMP wrongdoing only after leaving the solicitor-general's portfolio."

"I felt very much betrayed," he said. "I felt very let down. I hadn't just sat around and waited for them to provide information. I pursued it."

But he said the force gave him "a trick answer" when he asked whether the RCMP was surveying Roy Atkinson of the National Farmers Union. After repeating to the Commons the RCMP answer that it wasn't doing this, Allmand was told by Saskatchewan New Democrat Lorne Nystrom that a travel agent had been asked by the RCMP to tip them about Atkinson's travel plans.

Confronted with this, the RCMP told Allmand that Atkinson hadn't been under surveillance when he first asked them the question but had been watched previously.

Documents tabled by commission counsel Ross Goodwin indicated that the RCMP was still providing inaccurate information to the government four years after security service men in Montreal joined Quebec Provincial and Montreal police in an illegal raid on the offices of a left-wing news agency.

One document signed by Michael Dare, director-general of the security service, said it had been decided in 1972, shortly after the raid, to withhold the "full facts" from Jean-Pierre Goyer, then solicitor-general, because the facts might place him in an "untenable position."

Fire Wrecks Years of Research

DARTMOUTH, N.S. (CP) – A fire that raged through facilities of the Bedford Institute of Oceanography early Thursday came as a major blow to sophisticated research on oil pollution at sea, scientists said Thursday night.

In addition, research on industrial pollution and work on pesticide and chemical spraying of woodlands was either severely disrupted or destroyed, spokesmen at the centre said.

After an initial investigation, firemen said they believed the fire was caused by a faulty furnace. Fourteen of the facility's 26 mobile trailers containing laboratories and offices were destroyed in the fire and most of the others were heavily damaged by smoke.

The physical damage may cost $500,000 to repair but it would be impossible to put a value on the research data that took years to prepare but which now may be lost, Dr. Cedric Mann, director-general for ocean and aquatic sciences at the centre, said in an interview.

The work area of the federal environmental protection service was virtually wiped out in the pre-dawn fire, Dr. Mann said.

The personal materials and references lost by scientists in the fire had taken a lifetime to collect and will be difficult to replace, Dr. Peter Wells, an aquatic toxicologist at the centre, said in an interview.

Many of the research papers and manuscripts contained in the buildings the fire swept through were not copied before the fire, Dr. Wells said.

Among other things, the institute was involved in sophisticated studies on the population dynamics of certain species of seals. The results of those studies, some of which spanned several years, were to be used in stock management. They were destroyed.

The institute's marine and fish division was involved in complex work dealing with 1980 quotas that would be applied to Atlantic fishermen. Much of that material was lost, said division chief Dr. Ralph Halliday.

The institute's operations have been temporarily switched to facilities provided by the Eastern Petroleum Geological Group here.

Charles Kissed Again

TORONTO (CP) — The Prince of Wales delighted a small crowd at a Toronto hotel on Thursday and thrilled a Killaloe, Ont., woman merely by extending his hand — which she promptly kissed.

Although Prince Charles's first visit to Toronto was taken up largely by military matters, he stopped to chat informally with several well-wishers after Ontario Lt.-Gov. Pauline McGibbon introduced him to Premier William Davis in the hotel's foyer.

The crowd burst into applause when the heir to the British throne entered the foyer. They again applauded and pushed forward for a closer glimpse when he stopped to talk with several people before entering a reception given by the Royal Regiment of Canada.

"I kissed his hand," a breathless Millie Petroskie said. "I wanted to kiss his cheek but I was too nervous."

The 25-year-old mother, in Toronto to attend a convention, said that nothing as exciting as seeing a prince ever happens in Killaloe, a small town 40 kilometres southwest of Pembroke.

Earlier Thursday, the 30-year-old bachelor prince avoided another would-be kisser when he entered the hotel's lobby. The unidentified woman was promptly removed from the area by security police after she rushed up to the prince, apparently intending to give him a kiss.

Prince Charles, in Toronto to meet the regiment for the first time since he became its colonel-in-chief in 1977, saluted the troops as they paraded at Fort York Armoury.

Weston-Bay Merger 'Would Make Jobs'

TORONTO (UPC) — George Weston Ltd., renewing its take-over bid for the Hudson's Bay Company, said Thursday the combination of the two giant merchandisers would create jobs, provide an expanded tax base and improve services to Canadians.

Weston originally bid for 11.7 million Bay shares, 51 percent of the total. "Weston is now offering to purchase 60 percent (13,855,000 shares)," the company said in a statement Thursday. "Furthermore the minimum acceptance has been reduced to 45 percent."

The Weston offer is a mix of shares and cash adding up to a value of $40 per Bay share. The Thomson newspaper family has bid $35, in cash.

A federal investigation into the proposed takeover was initiated this week under the combines act at the request of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, which claims it threatens thousands of small companies.

Weston rejected arguments that its take-over would have a negative economic effect.

"It will be a combination of two great Canadian companies that will create a strong and diversified merchandising organization with a broad natural resource component," Weston said.

Casinos a Gamble: Quebec Report

QUEBEC (CP) — A Loto-Quebec study says legalization of gambling casinos in the province is "desirable," but attaches a series of "ifs" and "howevers" to its report.

The 300-page report, tabled in the national assembly Thursday by Finance Minister Jacques Parizeau, recommends that a group be formed to investigate ways of setting up casinos in Quebec.

But it warns that the province can expect only "marginal" revenues from casino gambling, adding that "the most profitable types of gambling are also those which generate the highest socio-economic costs."

It says gambling casinos should be oriented towards helping the province's tourist industry, and states that "the clientele aimed at should be non-resident."

It adds that because casinos seem to attract illegal activities, special care must be taken in controlling them.

It recommends that what it calls "fairground" casinos — the type found in Las Vegas or Atlantic City — not be built in Quebec.

Instead, it favors the creation of something like a gambling resort, more fully integrated with the tourist industry.

"In the American type, all activities are centred around the casino," Jean-Marc Lafaille, president of Loto-Quebec, told a news conference.

NDP Wins 2 Seats In Ontario

Canadian Press

Jubilant New Democrats today are celebrating their party's win in two Ontario provincial byelections Thursday, undeterred by the fact that they retained both ridings by substantially reduced margins.

Richard Johnston, a 32-year-old social worker, won the Toronto riding of Scarborough West, a seat held by former NDP leader Stephen Lewis and in the Hamilton riding of Wentworth, Colin Isaacs, 30, an education researcher, was the victor.

Radical U.S. Energy Plan

winter heating and 27 for air-conditioning. Styles in clothes may change for comfortable adaptation to an energy-stingy atmosphere.

— In states that fail to draw up acceptable conservation plans, service stations may be forced to close on weekends — a stern measure to be reserved for much more severe shortages than now exist. If it is carried out, travel habits will change.

— The air people breathe will be dirtier as more coal is used and as rules requiring unleaded gasoline are delayed or modified. This effect may be offset by switches to clean natural gas that is temporarily in surplus. In the long run, if people cut back enough on all energy, the air will clean up again.

— Carpool vans federal offices are using will increase and the bureaucrats' official cars will get smaller and decrease in number.

— Bureaucrats who drive their own cars to work will lose free parking privileges in a move to encourage them to use public transit. An energy fund created from a tax on oil will pay for better transit.

— More homes will have good insulation as owners take advantages of tax incentives. Some will sport solar energy collectors, perhaps enough of them eventually to change the landscape and the way buildings are designed and cities are planned.

— The products made from petroleum — medicines, plastics, paving, fabrics, lubricants, and thousands of others — will cost more as their raw material costs more.

But there also is good news, Carter says: In exchange for the changed lifestyle and higher bills, people will have a new, independent national spirit; less dependent on foreign oil producers, and more efficiency as an industrial nation.

An ABC News-Harris poll conducted before and after Carter's televised address shows that a large majority of those polled approved of his program to make the nation energy self-sufficient.

Meanwhile, Carter's plan to couple higher domestic oil and gasoline prices with a "windfall-profits tax" is already facing stiff opposition in Congress.

Top administration allies on Capitol Hill predicted an uphill battle for the tax proposal the president announced Thursday night.

"It's going to be tough," said Senator Henry Jackson (Dem. Wash.), chairman of the Senate energy committee.

The plan is a declaration of war on the Northeast, one congressman says. Another calls it a step in the right direction, and Sen. Edward Kennedy said today it could hurt Carter's re-election bid.

Kennedy (D-Mass) slammed the president's plan, saying he should have "put the cart before the horse" by pushing a windfall tax bill through Congress before decontrolling prices.

Rep. Edward Markey (D-Mass) agreed with Kennedy that it is unlikely Congress will pass a windfall profits tax.

"The Christians had a better chance against the lions than the consumers will have against the oil companies," he said.

Syrians and Israelis at War . . . 'No Ifs, Buts'

By AB KENT
Times Staff

Peace between Egypt and Israel will make life tougher for UN troops in the Middle East, a senior Canadian officer predicts.

Victoria-born Lieut.-Col. Ronald Marrs, on leave from Damascus where he is in command of logistics for UN forces on the Golan Heights, said the Syrians and Israelis are at war — "no ifs and buts about it."

Only a separation by the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force and a quasi-armistice prevents fighting on the Golan boundary between Syria and Israel, he said.

"People tend to be mesmerized by the Camp David talks," Marrs said.

"They forget the longstanding enmity between Israel and other Arab states, including Syria. They are not in a political mood to do anything of a peacekeeping nature."

Marrs believes it will be a long time before the struggle is resolved, if ever, in the fertile western Golan and the barren east toward the road to Damascus.

The peace signed by Egypt and Israel will bind together all the anti-Israeli Arabs, creating more tension on Israeli borders and the Golan Heights will be the last to see an end to strife.

The two sides take different views of the UN force, which has consisted of large Austrian and Iranian contingents with smaller Canadian and Polish components.

Marrs said the Israelis see the UNDOF as weak and powerless to stop a military action.

"But that's not its role. It's only to stop minor incidents, to try to stop escalation."

Originally the UNDOF was to supervise the disengagement of combatants, but it has grown into a sedentary peacekeeping force occupying sovereign Syrian territory where no military presence is tolerated.

"In my nine months there it has been relatively quiet in a military sense," said Marrs, here to visit his wife Kathy, two children and his parents.

There is an occasional accidental overflight of the Golan by military aircraft of one side or the other, but no shooting since Marrs arrived.

A regular air support service is flown between Egypt, Syria and Cypress by two Canadian Buffalo transports known to the troops as "Sunshine Airlines."

They are painted white and carry UN markings but the pilots are careful to fly strict corridors since one plane was shot down in the early days of the force.

Canadians are generally well respected by both sides, Marrs said.

"Our troops enjoy a very favorable position in this context. One of our big advantages is the Canadian flag on our uniforms."

He said the Canadians play an important role for the UN in the Middle East because they are the only professional soldiers taking part.

Marrs and his staff are responsible for all transport and logistical support — food services, engineering, billets, garbage disposal, maintenance and whatever else is necessary to field troops from diverse nationalities.

There are frustrating waits for equipment or supplies because of international bidding requirements; the UN has a limited budget for peacekeeping and food is a big problem in itself because of traditional requirements and individual preferences.

Even latrines can be troublesome for troops not used to plumbing, he said.

But it is good experience for the Canadians to learn how other nations run their armies and tackle problems, and between them, they make the multinational force work.

In his work Marrs gets to know a lot of Syrian businessmen and liaison officers, and members of the Israeli liaison staff. He has been a guest at both social extremes — an Israeli wedding and an Arab party.

TOWN TALK

Veteran enumerator Elaine Larose believes they are.

She points out many enumerators may earn even less this time around than they did in the 1974 election.

Under the old system enumerators were paid a basic $50 plus $12 for attending a training session, $10 to cover incidental expenses and 25 cents for each name collected.

Under the new system enumerators get $15 for the training session, $15 for incidental expenses and 40 cents a name up to 200 names, 60 cents a name over 200. The basic $50 payment has been dropped.

Larose says enumerators will have to collect 230 names just to break even. At 250 names, the maximum number assigned to any enumerator, the gain is a meager $5.50 over the old rate.

That works out to just under a four-per cent hike. Taking inflation into account it represents a huge reduction, in the order to 36 to 46 per cent depending on what inflation figures you use, eight per cent or 10 per cent per annum.

★ ★ ★

The Greater Victoria Public Library is arranging three evenings of speeches for the three declared Victoria riding candidates in the federal election.

On April 11, Liberal candidate Robert Monaghan will speak. The week following it will be Conservative candidate Allan McKinnon's turn. And on April 25, NDP standard-bearer Gretchin Brewin will take the podium.

"Because we don't have the room," she replied. There are only 120 seats in the library's auditorium.

"Is that why you've asked for pre-registration for the series?" our sleuth inquired.

"Yes," she answered.

"How many registrations do you have so far?" he asked.

"Sixteen," she said.

They plan to take in the international trade fair at Canton, hope to stop over briefly in Shanghai, and will spend a week in Peking.

Storm Sinks Boat Escapade

Stormy weather in the Strait of Juan de Fuca resulted in the arrest of a Victoria man who took a 32-foot charter fishing boat from the Inner Harbor late Thursday night.

When the boat, identified as the Tuggy, started to roll in heavy seas halfway across the strait, the man radioed for help.

The U.S. Coast Guard heard his call and sent out a cutter which escorted him into harbor at Port Angeles where he was taken into custody.

The boat, a diesel-powered, fibreglass cruiser valued at $78,000, belongs to Harbor Cruises. It was not damaged.

Owner Marcel Fisher, 3050 Devon, said he is uncertain whether to press charges against the 28-year-old man, whom he describes as a former employee.

View Royal Fights Off Oil Tanks

By HUMPHRY DAVY
Times Staff

The View Royal Community Association today slammed the proposal to move oil tank farms from the Inner Harbor to Esquimalt harbor.

Chairman Brian Tetlow said in a brief to the board there is "not one single valid reason why this small community with an attractive harbor should be burdened with such a facility and all the hazards it entails."

The association wants the Capital Regional Board to ask the provincial government to study alternatives.

Apart from fire hazards to residential areas, Tetlow said the facilities would threaten with oil pollution a harbor rich in wildlife resource and two major parks, Fort Rodd Hill and a waterfowl reserve.

"We can only assume the committee of the regional board instructed to find another location for oil tanks has not adequately assessed the situation, or else it looks to View Royal as being the community least able to defend itself against objectionable industrial encroachment," he said.

Tetlow said it isn't logical to move the oil tanks to Esquimalt and ruin a harbor with still 75 per cent of its shoreline still in its natural state.

"You would be simply moving an undesirable facility from one already largely despoiled waterway to one which still has much of its original natural appeal — and to the detriment of the community which surrounds it," he said.

Only 25 per cent of the shoreline is industrial compared with more than 50 per cent of the shoreline of Victoria harbor, he said.

"Most of Victoria harbor shoreline has long been used for industrial puposes and only a very minor section of shoreline has retained any of its original quality," he said. "The residental component of the backshore is also relatively minor, constituting about 11 per cent.

"With most of the Victoria harbor shoreline exposed to prevailing westerlies, it is questionable if this can ever be desirable waterfront for permanent residence," he said.

Apart from a study on all the implications of a move and for alternatives, he said the CRB should ask the government to look into consolidating the six oil tank installations in Victoria harbor into one or two locations in the same harbor.

Tetlow said Victoria harbor can only be restored to its original state at tremendous cost to taxpayers.

This isn't necessary, he said, if modern landscape techniques are applied to most of the industrial installations there.

"The major problem is the untidiness and lack of plan for industry around Victoria harbor," he said. "Much could be done to enhance the harbor without the costly process of actually phasing out industry."

Couvelier Challenges Mika

Saanich Mayor Mel Couvelier Wednesday challenged Ald. John Mika to a public debate on whether the rights of individual neighborhoods are of paramount importance in municipal planning.

Couvelier said the issue is a vital one which directly affects the financial future of the municipality and taxpayers' continued ability to pay for essential services.

"It's a fact of life the voters of Saanich must come to realize — that if they continue to elect councillors who believe each neighborhood has the absolute right of veto over the future destiny of the municipality, Saanich will never be able to plan its own future."

The mayor's comments in an interview were responding to Mika's charge that Couvelier had reneged on an election campaign promise to oppose the proposed industrial park in the Royal Oak area.

Couvelier said so long as the attitude prevails that each neighborhood must be engaged in dialogue before any decision is made, Saanich will continue to drift along in an ad hoc, unco-ordinated way.

He said it's inevitable such a philosophy will lead ultimately to a financial crisis because unless Saanich takes action now to broaden its tax base it will be impossible to maintain the municipality's present level of service to taxpayers.

"I am primarily concerned with the tax base of the municipality," he said, in justifying his decision Wednesday to provide a 5-4 majority on council in favor of reconsidering the Royal Oak proposal.

He pointed out that Saanich derives more than three-quarters of its assessment income from single-family residential taxes, while in the city of Victoria with a much heavier commercial-industrial base the proportion is only about one-third.

"Any economist will tell you that if a municipality is to balance its books and provide a reasonable level of service it has to have close to a 50-50 split (between residential and other taxation sources)," he added.

Couvelier flatly rejected Mika's charge that he had betrayed voters by switching his vote on the Royal Oak industrial park issue.

CUPE Seeks Conciliation

The Joint Negotiating Committee, representing five locals of the Canadian Union of Public Employees, wants a conciliation board set up to assist both parties in their current contract dispute.

The board proposal is now being put to the memberships of the individual locals.

Members of Local 50, representing city outside workers, voted unanimously in favor of the move Thursday night. Other locals will vote during the weekend and next week.

"The members felt that there were inadequate negotiations going on," Local 50 president Jim Walker said today. "We want the employers and the unions to sit down to serious negotiations."

The use of a conciliation board is an unusual move in such disputes and one not provided for in the Labor Code.

However, Walker said the parties are so far apart that the JNC feels only such a board can take the two positions, study them, and come back with non-binding recommendations.

"It is an unusual move but one that we think will bring the bargaining positions a little closer together," he said.

The Greater Victoria Labor Relations Association has offered the more than 1,800 municipal employees represented by the JNC a 11.5-per-cent increase in a two-year contract.

The employees are asking for 17 per cent in one year.

Officers Honored

Two Saanich policemen have been awarded the Star of Courage for exceptional bravery in rescuing a 70-year-old woman from a fire in her home last April.

Sgt. Denis Lush and Acting Cpl. John Archer, responding to a report of a fire at 786 Middleton at noon April 9, knocked down the front door and crawled through dense smoke until they found the body of Marguerite Brindley.

Lush, choking from smoke inhalation, had to retreat and collapsed on the front lawn, but Archer managed to drag the woman outside before he collapsed.

Firemen administered oxygen to the men but nothing could be done for Mrs. Brindley.

Early Closing Blamed On Hookers, Drunks

Complaints about hookers and drunks brought about the early closing hours for two downtown Victoria liquor stores, the Liquor Distribution Branch said today.

A number of complaints had been received from citizens and merchants near Nootka Court and the Yates Street liquor stores, LDB communications manager Joyce Courtney said.

The stores now close at 9 p.m., instead of 11 p.m. All stores open at 10 a.m.

"There were only a few customers at the two stores at 9 p.m. but all sorts of undesirables gathered there," she said.

"The customers were being bothered by prostitutes and by people in an advanced state of intoxication."

The early closing was in response to complaints but the LDB is willing to take a second look if there are countering complaints that the closure will hurt the tourist industry, she said.

"Quite frankly we haven't had a single complaint so far about the early closing hours," chamber manager Brian Small said.

At the same time, Small confirmed there had been a number of complaints about the drunks and prostitutes, who were bothering people on their way to the stores or heading for restaurants in the area.

"Perhaps if there had been a more visible display by the police this situation might not have developed," Small said.

He hopes the police will patrol near the two stores before 9 p.m..

If the police make a few patrols and clean up the area, it might be possible to return to the 11 p.m. closing hours, he said.

Two LDB stores in the district will continue to be open until 11 p.m. They are at 1087 McKenzie and 2955 Tillicum. LDB stores in shopping centres tend to close at 6 p.m.

Ex-Cougar Turns Out A Nice Guy

Mike Toal helped his former club — Victoria Cougars — with some scoring heroics, including a power-play goal in overtime Thursday night, to give Portland Winter Hawks a 4-3 decision over New Westminster Bruins in Western Hockey League playoff action.

The win at Queen's Park Arena in New Westminster gave Hawks a 5-1 record in the round-robin series to determine two teams for the best-of-seven Western Division final.

Cougars, who meet Hawks tonight in Portland and finish off the series with an 8:30 p.m. Saturday game against Bruins at Memorial Arena, are now tied with the New Westminster club at 2-4.

Toal scored at 7:34 of sudden-death overtime to give Portland a win over the defending Memorial Cup champions.

The Bruins got goals from Doug Hall, Dave Orleski and Scott MacLeod.

In the only other playoff game, Lethbridge Broncos took over first place in the Eastern Division struggle by blanking Calgary Wranglers 5-0 in Lethbridge.

The Broncos now have four wins and two losses in the three-team Central Division playoff series. The Wranglers now are 2-4 while Billings Bighorns are 3-3.

WREN SERVED UPLANDS 52 YEARS

District golfers today mourned the passing of John Wren, only the second in a short line of professionals to serve Uplands Golf Club.

Wren, 71, died Thursday, less than four months after the death of his wife, Jean.

Although he served briefly as head pro in Nanaimo, Wren's service to Uplands totalled 52 years. He served for many years as an assistant to Walter Gravlin, the club's first pro, before being named head pro at Uplands. Wren, in turn, was succeeded by Don Billsborough, the present pro, upon retirement in 1971.

Born in Tynemouth, England, Wren had been a resident of Victoria for over 60 years.

Wren is survived by a son and daughter-in-law, John D. and Betty of Delta, and his daughter and son-in-law, Joan and Bob Gillespie of Victoria; seven grandchildren and one great grandchild.

Funeral services will be held Monday at 10:30 a.m. at McCall Brothers Chapel.

Jackson Semi Set Saturday

Gorge of the first division and Prospect Lake of the second meet Saturday to determine the last finalist in the Vancouver Island Soccer League's annual Jackson Cup competition.

Gorge had an outstanding record during the last half of the current season, chalking up an eight-game unbeaten streak before dropping a decision to league-champion Victoria Athletics.

Much of the Gorge success stems from 30-year-old Goran Mehinagic, a talented veteran from Belgrade, Yugoslavia, who played as a junior international for the Red Star club. He then played for five years as a professional with Istanbul and Ankara in Turkey before moving to Canada.

The young Prospect Lake side has reached semi-finals with a combination of speed and talent but sometimes lack the consistancy that comes with experience.

Canadians Held to Draw

HAMILTON, Bermuda (Reuter) — Canada and the United States battled to a scoreless draw, while Bermuda and Mexico tied 2-2 in the second round Thursday of the North American zone Pan American Games qualifying soccer tournament.

The draws gave Canada and Mexico their first points in the round-robin competition. Bermuda and the U.S. each have three points. The top two teams advance to the Pan Am Games in San Juan, Puerto Rico, in July.

The final games will be played on Sunday. Canada plays Mexico and the U.S. meets Bermuda.

In addition to taking weekly honors, both also qualified for the fivepin Bowler-of-the-Year rolloffs 1 p.m. Apr. 29 at Town and Country.

Corky Plays a Polka On Bikers 'Snozz'

VANCOUVER (CP) — The brawling, bruising bikers moved out of the beer parlors and into the boxing ring Thursday night, only to be bested by a 30-year-old, overweight salesman who admits he is no "tough guy."

The battleground was the Gardens Auditorium, where 23 amateur combatants were attraced to a "So you wanna fight" competition. The event was patterned after a similar attraction in Toronto Jan. 16.

The bouncers, bikers, longshoremen and others who masqueraded as fighters were divided into two categories — under 200 pounds and over 200 pounds. It was in the heavier weight class where the more than 5,000 spectators got to see the classic confrontation between good and evil.

The good won when Vancouver salesman Corky Kaulius, who said later he wanted to donate his $1,000 first prize to charity, knocked out a bowl of jello disguised as a biker, named Mike "Snozz" Terezakis.

Then acting every bit the champion, Kaulius announced: "I'd go three rounds with just about anybody except maybe Joe Frazier or George Foreman."

Wayne Angelucci of Vancouver, who was a fortunate semi-final winner over Wayne McClay, took the under 200-pound title by decision over Louie Terrao, also of Vancouver.

Kaulius, who turns 31 next week, didn't carry his 225 pounds particularly well, and by the breadth of his paunch it appeared his serious training was done in an easy chair in front of the television set.

However, the former Golden Gloves boxer had two things his opponents didn't have — a devastating right hand and ring sense.

That combination allowed him to knock out the 242-pound Terezakis in the first round and complete his evening's activity in four minutes and two seconds.

He dispatched George Mecredi, a menacing looking native Indian from Uranium City, Sask. at 30 seconds of the second round in his first fight. Mecredi had a great scowl, but no penchant for getting hit. One solid punch by Kaulius proved enough.

The were two others in the over 200 class. Jack Dombrowski and Mike "Buckwheat" Mitchell. Mitchell took a few punches, knocked Dombrowski to the canvas and then was disqualified for punching him when he was down. Dombrowski decided he'd had enough and was never seen again.

Angelucci advanced to his final with Terrao in relatively easy fashion. He knocked out Derrick Rockhill of North Vancouver at 40 seconds of the first round and then got out of the semi-final when he cut McClay and the referee stopped the bout.

Kaulius admitted after his fights that he wasn't in good shape — "I've never been in shape in my life," — but said it wasn't really necessary.

"It doesn't matter how tough you are. It's different in the ring."

Then with a son under each arm, the smiling Kaulius returned to his easy chair, while the bikers retired to the nearest beer parlor to figure out how Corky was able to beat out the Beer Barrel Polka on their "Snozz."

Nuggets Gain Tie for Lead As Hot Streak Continues

By The Associated Press

"Three weeks ago, I didn't even have it in my mind that we might win the division title," Denver Nuggets coach Donnie Walsh said Thursday night.

"Then, when George McGinnis got hurt (last Friday), I thought for sure we wouldn't do it. But that injury has turned out to be a motivating factor for us. We have a lot of veterans and they have responded to the challenge."

The Nuggets, led by veterans Dan Issel and Charlie Scott, posted their ninth victory in 10 starts Thursday night, beating New York Knicks 114-107 to climb into a tie for first place with Kansas City Kings in the National Basketball Association's Midwest Division. At stake is a bye through the dangerous best-of-three first round of the playoffs. The Nuggets have won two since McGinnis was injured.

In the only other game Thursday night, Detroit Pistons rallied to defeat New Orleans Jazz 120-104.

Denver has two road games left, at Boston tonight and in Philadelphia on Sunday, while Kansas City plays at home tonight against New Jersey Nets before finishing its season Sunday at Indianapolis against the Pacers.

"We're not really concerned about the division title," claimed Issel, the 6-foot-9 centre who had 20 of his 28 points in the second half and also grabbed 15 rebounds.

"What's most satisfying is that we're playing our best basketball of the year going into the playoffs," he added. "This hasn't always been true of Denver.

Brewer Bats Sink Guidry

By Associated Press

Nobody's perfect — not even Ron Guidry.

The ace of the New York Yankee pitching staff seemed to be up to his Cy Young-winning form against the Milwaukee Brewers Thursday — until he made some uncharacteristic mistakes.

First, Gorman Thomas broke his no-hit spell with one out in the sixth inning, and then several others got into the act as the Brewers scored four runs en route to a 5-1 victory.

"I was surprised things went so smoothly at first because I usually struggle in the beginning of the year," said Guidry, a 25-game winner for baseball's world champions last year.

"I was throwing good, but with the first batter in the sixth I could tell I was starting to struggle because the ball started doing what it hadn't been doing."

Guidry had thrown just 40 pitches while retiring the Brewers' first 16 batters. But then he went to a 3-2 pitch on Thomas, and the Milwaukee hitter smashed a line drive single to left.

"I was thinking, just hit the ball," Thomas said. "That's all you can think about when you go to the plate. I hit a high fastball, the same pitch I struck out on in the third inning."

Later in the inning, Don Money erased New York's 1-0 lead with a two-run single, Cecil Cooper grounded a run-scoring single and Sixto Lezcano chased Guidry with an RBI base hit.

In the National League, San Diego Padres defeated Los Angeles Dodgers 4-3 and New York Mets outscored Chicago Cubs, 10-6.

Milwaukee's sixth-inning uprising was more than enough for Mike Caldwell, who pitched a seven-hitter for the Brewers in the season opener for both teams. Caldwell, ironically, had finished second to Guidry in last year's Cy Young voting with a 22-victory season.

Jim Rice hit a three-run homer and Dwight Evans and Fred Lynn belted solo shots to power Boston over Cleveland. Dennis Eckersley allowed only two hits in seven innings before reliever Dick Drago took over in the eighth, allowing one hit the rest of the way.

Rice, the league's most valuable player after hitting 46 homers and driving in 138 runs last year, gave Eckersley the cushion he needed with his homer off Cleveland starter Rick Wise in the third inning.

Although collecting two hits in four trips, Rice wasn't entirely satisfied with his performance.

"I haven't been swinging that well the last few days," said Rice, "so I'll have to take extra batting practice tomorrow."

Home Arena Helps Bruins But Not Much

By The Canadian Press

It has been said that home ice is worth an extra goal to a professional hockey team. Boston Bruins proved it Thursday night.

A week earlier, they had travelled to Buffalo and taken a 9-2 thrashing from Buffalo Sabres, a team that will finish a distant second behind them in the National Hockey League's Adams Division when the regular season ends Sunday.

The teams met again at Boston Garden Thursday. This time the Sabres won 9-3.

For Boston fans willing to take the longer view, there was still something to celebrate. New York Islanders' 3-1 victory over Philadelphia Flyers enabled the Bruins to clinch third place in the over-all NHL standings. That may give the Bruins an extra home game at some stage of the Stanley Cup playoffs.

In the only other NHL game Thursday, Colorado Rockies and Los Angeles Kings played to a 4-4 tie.

The Sabres, unable to beat Boston this season until they squeezed out a 2-1 victory in their fifth meeting last January, drove Bruins goaltender Gerry Cheevers cut of the net when they beat him for six goals in the second period. Rookie Jim Pettie, victim of their previous nine-goal barrage, then let in two more in the third period.

Danny Gare, no ball of fire offensively for Buffalo this season, had three goals for the Sabres and set up two more by linemates Gilbert Perreault and Jacques Richard. Rick Martin, a three-goal man at the teams' previous meeting, put in two more.

"We've played 18 games in 35 days, six in the last nine," he said. "The guys were totally exhausted. Cheevers has played five games in a row. I think he was whippped."

In the individual scoring race, Brian Trottier of the Islanders stayed four points ahead of the Kings' Marcel Dionne as both picked up an assist Thursday. Guy Lafleur of Montreal, seeking his fourth consecutive scoring title, was another two points back.

Firefighters Have Playoff

NEW WESTMINSTER (CP) — Ernie Kovacs of Winnipeg became the spoiler Thursday when his Manitoba rink doubled Ed Werenich of Scarborough, Ont., 10-5 to prevent Southern Ontario from winning the Canadian firefighters curling championship.

The two rinks meet today to determine the winner.

British Columbia, Saskatchewan and Manitoba were tied at 6-3.

Jockey Club Sees Tax Cut as Benefit

VANCOUVER (CP) — The 60th season of thoroughbred racing begins Monday night at Exhibition Park with the first of 108 scheduled cards at the five-eighths of a mile track.

Officials of the British Columbia Jockey Club are more hopeful than confident that it will be another record-breaking year at the mutuel wickets.

One positive factor was contained in the provincial budget April 2 which lowered the government's net share of the pari-mutuel tax from 6.5 per cent to 5.5 per cent and the overall takeout from 18 per cent to 17.

"If there is reason to be optimistic, it is the tax reduction," Merv Peters, director of racing for the B.C. Jockey Club, said Thursday.

"Because of the good weather in March the horses are better prepared and overall they are of better quality. But the economy does not look all that bright and the Vancouver newspaper strike will hurt.

"We have to have a 10 per cent increase in mutuel handle to keep pace with inflation. We have to generate more mutuel play to pay larger purses so that horsemen can make ends meet and so that we can stay even with our ever increasing expenses."

The handle last season averaged $876,000 a day, so a 10 per cent increase would mean another $87,000 per day through the mutuel machines.

A total of 54 stakes races have been scheduled, headed by the B.C. Derby on Sept. 8 and the B.C. Premier's Championship on Sept. 29. Both have purses of $50,000.

However, the richest purse will be for the Jack Diamond Futurity on Sept. 1. When all nomination fees are included, the $30,000 purse will amount to about $70,000.

The opening night feature is the United Way allowance for fillies and mares and net proceeds from the card go to the United Way Building Fund.

The first stakes event is the $10,000 Inaugural for three-year-olds on April 12.

Sam Krasner, who won the riding title last season with 104 winners, will be back to defend his laurels, but Ken Skinner, runner-up last season and champion in 1975 and 1977, has decided to remain at Golden Gate Fields in Northern California.

Skinner is the only top rider not returning. Among the newcomers are former Ontario star Jim Kelly, who rode in Manitoba last year, Ken Gold and Ron Carrasco, who have been regulars on the Alberta circuit.

Krasner spent the winter riding at Turf Paradise in Phoenix, Ariz., and is confident he will retain his title.

"You must remember I got off to a very slow start last year," says the 28-year-old native of Atlanta, Ga. "I'll have better horses to ride right off the bat this year."

Krasner's chief opposition probably will come from Chris Loseth, the 1976 champion, and Brian Johnson, who has been near the top for several years.

Salmon Success Declines In Several Island Areas

Salmon fishing has been spotty in most areas around Vancouver Island during the past week — possibly because wind has kept most fishermen off the water — but some of the more hardy types continue to connect just about everywhere.

Jack Horner landed a 22-pound chinook Sunday trolling a green and white hootchie off Possession Point at Sooke and when the wind died down Thursday other fishermen came back with limit catches of bluebacks to four pounds from Secretary Island. The chinooks have also been biting off Secretary.

Chinooks to 18 pounds and a few blues have been landed off Becher Bay from the Bedfords to Beechey Head. The chinooks have been grabbing strip, minnows, anchovies and Squirts trolled with 60 to 80 feet of line and up to three pounds of weight and the blues have been taken on Tom Mack spoons and Stingsildas.

Blues and chinooks to 16 pounds form a fifty-fifty catch off Pedder Bay with most of the action off the kelp bed. Strip and large minnows have worked well for both species with blues showing up in the top 30 or 40 feet of water and chinooks taken near the bottom. Fish early in the morning or on the tide change.

* * *

Returns have dropped off at Oak Bay but a few blues and chinooks continue to trickle in from the Victoria waterfront.

Sidney waters are still fishless but at least one fisherman is landing chinooks to eight pounds using a blue and silver hootchie on the north side of Senanus Island. Troll at the 125-foot depth early in the morning and drop down to 225 feet later in the day. Blues are also coming in around the same spot using surface gear.

Chinooks to 10 pounds are producing spotty returns in Finlayson Arm but blues are starting to show off Stone House and near Goldstream Island.

* * *

Further up-Island, chinooks to 15 pounds are causing a flurry of activity in Porlier Pass and a few are still coming in off Bold Bluff.

Nanaimo fishing is still hot with a lot of blues to two pounds and a few chinooks to eight pounds biting off Five Fingers, Snake Island and Piper's Lagoon using green and white or blue and white hootchies or strip. Trouble is, you have to go down 240 to 300 feet for the chinooks.

Good chinook returns were reported in Vernon Bay at the mouth of Alberni Inlet and there was at least one 32-pounder taken using deeply-trolled strip.

The odd 30-pounder is showing off Comox Bay and a few chinooks to 12 pounds are mixed with blues just about everywhere off Campbell River.

* * *

Trout fishing continues to get better all the time.

Good success was noted on bait in the lower lakes around Duncan as well as in Comox Lake, Miller Creek and Upper Campbell Lake.

* * *

Steelhead fishermen are reminded to mail in their old punch cards when purchasing their new licence . . . Even if you haven't taken a steelie this past year, the information helps biologists manage the resource a little bit better.

* * *

The provincial contribution to the federal-provincial Salmonid Enhancement Program will be reduced by $64,800 in the 1979-80 fiscal year if the budget proposed by the present government goes through . . . Last year, the provincial share amounted to $2,064,800 . . . On Vancouver Island, the province will spend $353,713 compared to $457,000 in 1978-79.

Jets, Molsons Sign Pact

WINNIPEG (CP) — Winnipeg Jets and Molson Brewery Manitoba Ltd. announced Thursday a six-year agreement giving the brewery sole radio and television promotion rights.

The agreement is reported to be worth about $2.7 million.

Michael Gobuty, president of the World Hockey Association team, announced the agreement at a news conference Thursday while praising the brewery for being instrumental in the merger of four WHA teams with the National Hockey League.

"I don't believe that without them (Molson) fighting for us . . . that this great merger would have happened," Gobuty said.

Other WHA teams going into the NHL next season are Edmonton Oilers, Quebec Nordiques and New England Whalers. Molson had earlier obtained a similar promotional agreement with Edmonton.

The brewery also has exclusive promotional and advertising rights for Toronto Maple Leafs, Montreal Canadiens and Vancouver Canucks.

Under the agreement with the Jets, the brewery obtains sole promotional rights for radio, television and any advertising pertaining to the team.

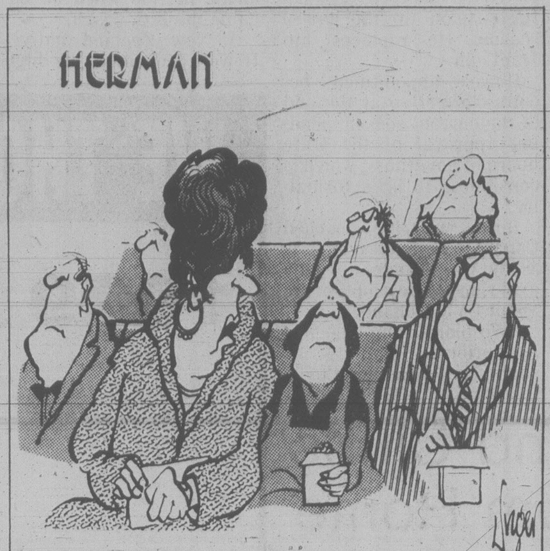
Marc Cloutier, vice-president in charge of marketing for the Jets, told the news conference it may be one of the biggest deals the Jets will every have before them.

"It's one of the biggest deals, not only in money, but because Molson has a great background in promotions," Cloutier said. "They know how to market hockey."

Current provincial legislation prohibits brewery advertising on radio or television but Attorney-General Gerry Mercier indicated this week the regulations might be changed.

"I expect the Jets will be making a submission to the Liquor Control Commission and the government to have the act changed," Mercier said.

"I'm sure we'll look into the situation here in Manitoba."



"Mommy can't see very well. D'you wanna swap seats?"

Three Contracts

DENVER (AP) — Free-agent fullback Larry Canada has signed a series of three one-year contracts with Denver Broncos of the National Football League.

Big Six Tussle

Victoria Athletics and Western Homes Buckaroos square off at 8:30 p.m. Sunday at the Racquet Club for their sixth game in the best-of-seven South Island Big Six Hockey League playoff final.

Athletics lead the series, 3-2.

If a seventh game is necessary, it will be played at 8:15 p.m. Monday at Memorial Arena.

Judy's Five Under Par Leads Winners Circle

RANCHO MIRAGE, Calif. (AP) — Judy Rankin, the premier player on the Ladies Professional Golf Association tour two years ago, clipped five strokes off par with a 67 Thursday to take the opening-round lead in the $305,000 Winners Circle tournament.

Nancy Lopez, who became the tour's dominant player last year, and defending champion Sandra Post, a native of Oakville, Ont., were one stroke back at 68 in the hunt for the $37,000 first prize.

JoAnne Carner, Laura Baugh, Chako Higuchi, Donna Young and Debbie Austin were all two strokes back with first-round 69s over the 6,272-yard, par-72 Mission Hills Country Club course.

With her irons working to perfection, Rankin carded six birdies, one bogey and the rest pars en route to a 32-35 round.

She missed just one green, going some six feet over the putting surface on the par-4, 365-yard third hole. But she chipped up close to the pin and sank the putt for par.

Rankin, 34, was hampered by back trouble last year and took a 3½-month respite from the tour.

Kite Flying High At Greensboro

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Tom Kite, who hadn't even seen the golf course in two years, hustled to a four-under-par 68 and a tie with four others for the first-round lead on Thursday in the $250,000 Greater Greensboro Open golf tournament.

Sharing the top spot with him were Jim Thorpe, Jack Renner, Bobby Walzel and Keith Fergus, all of whom are seeking their first PGA tour title.

Bob Eastwood and Barney Thompson were a single stroke back at 69, three under par on the 6,984-yard Forest Oaks Country Club course drenched by two days of rain.

"I didn't play here last year and I didn't get here until Tuesday this week," said Kite. "With the weather we've had, I didn't get a chance to practice at all. I hadn't seen the course in two years.

"It's not a very good feeling going out like that. But, maybe I should do it all the time."

Despite his unfamiliarity, he birdied five of his first eight holes, then cooled off and dropped back into a share of the lead.

Morrow on Trip to Cuba; Howe Named UVic Coach

University of Victoria loses a coach temporarily, gains one temporarily and has one lined up for next season — hopefully.

The departing coach is Al Morrow, who left today for Cuba with a contingent of rowers as part of a Canada-Cuba sports exchange program. Morrow will be back in time to coach UVic in the Maple Bay regatta at Quamichan on Saturday, April 28.

While in Cuba he will assist head coach Alan Roaf of Ottawa during training sessions April 10-16 involving Ontario rowers in men's singles, fours without coxswain and coxed fours.

Moving temporarily into UVic's McKinnon Gym is Don McCrae, serving as coach of the national women's basketball team heading for the world championhips next month in Korea. McCrae, who coaches the Ontario University Athletic Association champion Waterloo Warriors men's team, begins twice-a-day drills Saturday and will continue workouts with about 30 prospective national team players through April 22.

The hopeful coach is Bruce Howe, head of UVic's physical education department who has been appointed coach of UVic Vikings rugby team for the 1979-80 season. He replaces Ian MacLean.

Howe's appointment becomes effective at the end of the current season, pending approval of the UVic board of governors, which is considered to be a formality.

Howe, who has coached Canadian national teams, is 38 and has 20 years of rugby experience. He's optimistic about UVic's chances.

"We plan to implement a pass-oriented game," he said. "We will attempt to be the best conditioned team in competition and despite a slight rebuilding process are potentially the country's best university squad."

Howe spent the past season as head coach of the B.C. provincial side and guided Vancouver Island teams to two McKechnie Cups during his three-year tenure as Island all-star coach which ended in 1978 when he became the B.C. coach.

A New Zealand native, Howe coached at the high school level before moving to North America where he was playing-coach of the University of Oregon Ducks (1964-66). He returned to New Zealand after college and played four years at the provincial and senior club level.

Howe's first UVic coaching job was with the now-defunct Jutes in 1970-71. He then joined Oak Bay Wanderers as playing coach until 1973 and captained the B.C. selects in '72-73.

Saskatchewan Near Postal Curling Title

SAINT JOHN, N.B. (CP) — Saskatchewan took the lead Thursday at the Canadian postal curling championships with a 3-2 win over Alberta in tenth-round play.

After nine rounds, the two teams had been tied with identical 8-1 won-lost records, but Thursday's win gives Saskatchewan sole possession of first place.

Saskatchewan's record stood at 9-1 after the game, while the loss dropped Alberta to 8-2 and a tie for second place with New Brunswick and Manitoba.

Northwest Territories was in third place with 6-4. Victoria's Al Wright is 4-6.

Wright lost to Nova Scotia 9-8 and defeated Prince Edward Island 7-5 Thursday.

BLIZZARD WON'T SUPPORT STRIKE

TORONTO (CP) — Players for Toronto Blizzard of the North American Soccer League voted Thursday not to support a proposed strike by NASL players, said Blizzard coach Keith Eddy.

Representatives for the players were not immediately available for comment.

"It was just a thing they did themselves," commented Eddy, adding that he didn't know how the vote would affect the team with the rest of the league.

The NASL Players Association is fighting for recognition by league owners. Strike votes by the players of the league's 24 teams are being taken this week.

The NASLPA also has filed for union recognition in Canada under Canadian labor law for Toronto and Vancouver Whitecaps. It also is expected to file a similar action for Edmonton Oilers next week.

Allison Wins Pole for Rebel 500

DARLINGTON, S.C. (AP) — Donnie Allison, off probation for his role in the infamous Daytona 500 confrontation with Cale Yarborough, won the pole position on Thursday in the opening round of qualifying for Sunday's $180,000 Rebel 500 Grand National stock car race.

The 38-year-old Allison surprised the more heavily favored entries of his brother Bobby Allison, Buddy Baker and David Pearson with a sizzling lap at 154.797 miles an hour.

That edged out a slightly frustrated Darrell Waltrip by .076 of a second. Waltrip just missed the No. 1 starting spot by a similarly small margin last week at the Southeastern 500 in Bristol, Tenn.

"Well, you know last season, we got beat out of a pole by something like one one-hundredth of a second or something like that, so I know how Darrell feels," Allison said. "The competition to a pole is very tough these days."

Pole position winners this season each receive cash and prizes, and, most importantly, become eligible for a special race at the start of next season worth at least $150,000.

A GAME OF CHARACTER BUT WITHOUT CHARACTERS

Identity Crisis In Golf

By THOMAS BOSWELL
The Washington Post

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. — Professional golf is going through a perplexing identity crisis that can easily become even more nettlesome.

It has taken less than three months of this year's PGA tour to demonstrate the precariousness of the game's mass popularity.

Television ratings are down — 25 percent for some events — and with good reason.

Little-known and, in some cases, eminently forgettable players have won half of the year's events. The first 10 tournaments were won by 10 different players — hardly the stuff of on-going drama.

Golf is in danger of becoming a game without a single dominant player about whom the sporting public cares deeply.

ANDY NORTH
. . . unknown champion

The gypsy caravan known as the pro tour does not offer teams — only individuals. It needs a star system, demands it for success. Since golf has no home-team lure, it can only sell personality. And that commodity is in dangerously short supply.

The emergence of one new star in a constellation of old ones is the best possible situation. That's what golf wishes it had.

The arrival of many good but unfamiliar players on an already cluttered and poorly defined scene is the worst possible situation. And that's what golf has.

* * *

Golf is a sport with too many good players and not enough great ones, a game that has too much character and not enough characters.

Golfers essentially are isolated, men who practice alone, play alone, depend on no one else. Their's is the mind game, and most of their great battles are fought on an unseeable field.

Their humor is gallows wit that only other sufferers at the hand of the devil's game can understand. Their pain often is too subtle, and too personal, for them to express.

Worst of all for the omnivorous sports public, golfers play the most insecure and mysterious of games. No one knows what makes the golf swing tick or what makes it explode. It is a game of infinite science and infinite magic.

Golf is the humbling game and none knows it better than the best.

It took the young, fat Nicklaus a decade to learn his on-course smiles and minijokes that now are as studied as a seven-iron pitch and run. To help sell his game, Nicklaus learned to put "on" and "off" switches on his formidable concentration. No other current golfer, alas, has even tried to learn tha knack.

* * *

It is a freak of athletic nature that one champion was Arnold Palmer. Golf's Gable fits in no category. The refined, well-mannered world of golf cannot bank on any more like him. They aren't part of the package.

Tennis, by contrast, seems to stumble periodically on its magnificent barbarians, even in the blazer-and-martini set. Jimmy Connors, Ilie Nastase and budding bore John McEnroe are the sort of brooding hero-villains that golf seems to weed out by natural selection.

What is giving golf its current migraines, however, is not the loss of Palmer, the aging of Nicklaus or the paucity of stand-up fairway comedians. The nightmare is that none of the game's budding talents seems able to define himself. Only greatness can make them game-enlivening attractions. None, except perhaps Tom Watson, seems touched with elan.

It is Watson's sin that he is too thoughtful, too sensibly private to be glamorous.

"I'm in pursuit of excellence," he said this week. "No one except perhaps Byron Nelson (his tutor) has ever been able to hit every shot — high, low, draw, fade — off one basic swing in an upright plane. I believe it can be done."

That is the way golfers think and talk. No sport is so totally immersed in theory, jargon, quasi-science and amateur psychology.

As soon as gentle Ben Crenshaw or cocky Lanny Wadkins makes a move for the top, he self-destructs in a blitz of missed cuts. "I went the entire '78 season without having four consistent rounds in a row," said Crenshaw recently. "The word erratic is a stigma I carry around," said Wadkins. "I hate it."

Typical of the anonymous brigade is the current U.S. Open champion, old what's-his-name, who is nearly as famous as the present PGA champ, that nice young blond oh, you-know-who.

Give up? So does Andy North. "I used to be mistaken for Jerry Heard," says the reigning Open champ. "Now I get mixed up a lot with Andy Bean. You know, we're both tall and have the same first name."

* * *

It gets worse. Gil Morgan won $267,459 last year and Commissioner Deane Beman probably couldn't pick him out of a police lineup.

Anyone who can identify Bill Kratzert, Mark Hayes, Lon Hinkle, Tom Kite and Bruce Lietzke on the street wins a year's subscription to Golf Course Superintendent. Each won more than $100,000 last year and stood in the sport's top 20.

Golf pros have raised mistaken identity to an art form. If Lou Graham is not the least-known $100,000 athlete in sports then Mac McLendon is.

It is a fact of PGA life that the sporting public knows more about the 25 members of the New York Yankees than it does about the top 25 money-winners of the '78 season — i.e., who is Howard Twitty? One baseball team is known in more depth than an entire major sport.

Chief among the inadvertant culprits responsible for this identity gap are players like Hubert Green, Hale Irwin, Miller Barber, Al Geiberger and Dave Stockton who have won a million dollars without leaving a mark in lore or breaking through to genuine stardom. Irwin is symptomatic of an entire breed — the check casher. Last year he set a record he deserves: most money accumulated in a year without winning a tournament — $191,666. In a dozen seasons, Irwin has won one major championship.

Golf has so many pretty-boy princes and so few kings because they all get in each other's way. Confidence needs success in order to grow, and vice versa.

But when each tournament has only one winner, there isn't enough confidence to go around. Goals are lowered. Cashing checks, living the good, inconspicuous life looks better. Who really wants the aggravation of being king?

Only Nicklaus.

Peking Makes Concession In Two-China Controversy

MONTEVIDEO (AP) — Peking sports officials shifted their ground slighty on Thursday, kindling hopes that two separate Chinese teams might compete in next year's Olympic Games in Moscow.

Song Zhong, secretary general of the Olympic Committe of the People's Republic of China, told newsmen he would accept an idea of a separate team from Taiwan on two conditions:

—The controlling body in Taiwan must be called the Olympic Committee of China (Taiwan branch);

—The Taiwanese must not use the flag or anthem of the old Republic of China.

The International Olympic Committe (IOC) has opened its 81st session and expects to deal with the China problem today. It currently recognizes Taiwan and has been asked to recognize the People's Republic.

Henry Hsu, IOC member for Taiwan, immediately said Song's proposal was unacceptable, and sources said the IOC will not accept it either because it was aimed at putting Taiwan in a position subordinate to Peking.

However, Song's statement indicated a definite change of stance. Two days ago, he was insisting the Taiwanese must compete as members of a Chinese team directed from Peking.

Many of the 74 IOC members at the meeting now believe they have a chance of bringing the two parts of China, which officially are at war with each other, into friendly competition in the Olympic Games. Delegations from the two sides — Taiwan first, then Peking — will go before the IOC today.

Supermarket Prices A Ripoff: Broadbent

By PAUL WHITELAW

WINNIPEG (FP) — Jostled by camera crews and reporters, NDP Leader Ed Broadbent toured a co-op foodstore Thursday to deliver his message that giant supermarket chains are ripping off shoppers.

Broadbent said he has "absolutely no doubt" that "the major reason for very substantial increases" in food prices is the high profit margin of foodstores and "middlemen."

The NDP leader stated that price increases "at the store level are way beyond what the farmer got" and much higher than could be justified by rising labor costs."

Pointing to the 21.7 per cent rise in retail food costs during the past year, Broadbent repeated his call for a Fair Prices Commission with power to investigate price increases and order rollbacks.

The NDP leader named three large supermarket chains and George Weston Ltd., a major food processor, as examples of businesses whose profits should be scrutinized.

"Weston's profits increased from $27.4 million in 1977 to $50.6 million in 1978, an 84 per cent increase in one year," said Broadbent, squinting to read his notes under the glare of TV lights.

"Loblaw, a major chain profits increased in one year from $18.3 million to $25.5 million."

Broadbent also cited the profits of M. Loeb, up 33.8 per cent in 1978 from $4.6 million to $6.1 million.

Although he did not have year-end figures for Canadian Safeway, the major chain in Western Canada, the NDP leader said their profits were up by 61 per cent and a continuation of that trend would produce "the highest profits in the history of the company."

By contrast, Broadbent noted that wage increases for supermarket employees "made up for only about one per cent" in the cost of rising prices at the checkout counter and farmer's profits were lagging far behind the retail food inflation rate.

"Pork prices for the farmer went up 1.6 per cent, but at the store by 11.7 per cent," he cited as one example.

Trudeau Ridicules '$7B Man'

ELECTION 79

WINNIPEG (CP) — Ridiculing Tory economic policies as too expensive, Prime Minister Trudeau hung a new nickname on Progressive Conservative Leader Joe Clark Thursday night — "the seven-billion-dollar man."

Trudeau claimed that Clark's election promises to cut taxes and provide incentives for industries would cost the country more than $7 billibn at a time when restraint in government spending is needed.

"You know, first when Mr. Clark was chosen party leader he was known as a red Tory," Trudeau told a crowd estimated by one Liberal organizer at more than 2,000.

"Now, I think you know he's known as a red-ink Tory, but . . . we now call him the seven-billion-dollar man."

Trudeau's aggressive attack on Conservative economic policies, was a shift from the issues of national unity, leadership and energy that have so far dominated the Liberal leader's campaign.

Liberal strategists travelling with Trudeau, who stopped here en route to British Columbia from New Brunswick, beamed with joy following the address in a school gymnasium, expecting Trudeau's new nickname for Clark will dog the Conservative leader throughout the campaign for the May 22 election.

Clark has refused to state how much his economic policies would cost, saying "it's a problem of specificity" that only a magic accountant could calculate.

Various attempts by Conservatives to estimate the cost of their economic plans have resulted in conflicting figures, Trudeau said.

Trade Shields PC's Policy

SASKATOON (CP) — Joe Clark outlined protectionist trade policies Thursday which a Progressive Conservative government would use to help the resource and agricultural industries.

As he did in the British Columbia farm and mining community of Kamloops, Clark criticized the government for what he called sacrificing Canada's capacity to protect itself from erratic supplies of foreign energy and minerals.

And he promised tax and other incentives to develop industrial technology, particularly in mining, which he says could create 115,000 jobs over the next 20 years.

At Kamloops, he reiterated a pledge to protect domestic cattlemen from foreign competition, mainly from Australia and New Zealand.

He spoke at a Chamber of Commerce luncheon after touring the nearby Afton copper mine and blamed the Liberal govenment for a three-year industry slump while promising to introduce tax breaks to get mining back on its feet.

In a policy paper released in conjunction with his visit, Clark pledged measures to ensure the federal government "will not bargain away" domestic mining potential at the current international trade talks in Geneva and law of the sea talks in New York.

The policy paper said a Conservative government will "think twice" about allowing the federal Export Development Corporation to finance foreign mining ventures which might hurt the Canadian industry.

Clark accused the government of using mining as a pawn in a struggle for power with the provinces, noting that in 1974 it ended the industry right to deduct provincial royalties from federal taxes.

Carney Changes Mind

VANCOUVER (CP) — Economist Pat Carney, who earlier won the Progressive Conservative nomination for the federal Vancouver Centre riding but later resigned, wants to run again.

Carney, who has been touted in some party circles as cabinet timber, bowed out last month saying her economic consultant's business demanded too much time.

David Ingram, who took up the Conservative banner after Ms. Carney dropped out, has agreed now to step aside for her but renomination may be necessary.

Pepin to Try For Comeback

OTTAWA (CP) — Jean Luc Pepin, former cabinet minister and co-chairman of the Task Force on Canadian Unity, announced Thursday his candidacy for the Liberal nomination in the riding of Ottawa-Carleton.

The 58-year-old former federal industry minister and anti-inflation board chairman told a news conference he wants to return to politics to use the knowledge and experience he has gained at public expense.

"It seems to me that the next years and the next months are going to be extremely difficult and it seems to me that everyone who feels he can make a contribution should," he said.

'Thank You' Theme

SASKATOON (CP) — "Thank you very much."

It's a line Joe Clark uses dozens of times a day as he campaigns across thd country in the May 22 election.

It probably was inevitable that it would become his campaign song. Reporters travelling with the Conservative leader Thursday tried it out.

As Clark entered his chartered jet for a flight from Kamloops, B.C., he was greeted, to the tune of John Brown's Body, with a song which has a chorus that goes:

"Thank you very, very, very, very, very, very much.

"Thank you very, very, very, very, very, very much.

"Thank you very, very, very, very, very, very much."

"I see, I see, I see."

After listening to the song Clark put his hands on his hips and said — you guessed it — thank your very, very much.

Thumb Print of Accused Found on Boat - RCMP

The right thumb print of one of five men accused of conspiracy to import marijuana was found on a cupboard aboard the vessel Weatherly, a county court jury was told Thursday.

The print belonged to Garth Clarence Vincent Joseph Sexton, 28, testified Cpl. Jack Payne of the RCMP, who lifted the impression, and Sgt. Carl Chizeck of the RCMP, who took Sexton's prints at Victoria police station.

Crown counsel Gordon Macdonald told the jury in his opening remarks that the prosecution would attempt to show that the Mexican vessel Toernyn, loaded with 13.5 tons of Colombian marijuana, rendezvoused with the vessels Weatherly and Sunfish in Shelter Inlet and the contraband was loaded on to the two vessels.

He added that the prosecution would say that the Weatherly was apprehended by the RCMP and 11 persons aboard arrested. Four more were arrested on shore and 439 bales of marijuana weighing 13.5 tons were found, he said.

Sexton and Ronald Cecil Spurrell, 31, of Surrey; Frederick Charles Scott, 28, of Vancouver; John Mobley Doss, 25, of Dillon, Colorado, formerly of Newfoundland; and Frank Piersanti, 28, of Montreal are accused of:

— Conspiracy to import marijuana with 14 named persons and persons unknown between April 1 and July 16, 1978.

— Possession of marijuana July 15 for the purpose of trafficking.

Payne, a fingerprint expert, said he took photographs July 15 and 16 of a small campsite at the mouth of the Megin River which included zodiac boats behind two tents and, across Shelter Inlet on Obstruction Island, he photographed two outboard motors and a large number of bales covered with topsack 75 to 100 feet from the beach, in the bush.

The area is just over 20 miles northwest of Tofino.

He searched the Weatherly for fingerprints July 16 at Tofino and identified one as belonging to Sexton.

Chizeck said he fingerprinted a number of persons July 16 at Victoria police station, including Sexton, and he identified Sexton in court. He also fingerprinted Edwin Floyd Terry and Payne identified a print from the Weatherly as belonging to him.

Chizeck agreed there is no way of determining the age of a fingerprint.

Payne said the campsite was about one mile from where the bales were found and added that no bales were found at the campsite.

Sgt. Allan de St. Remy, skipper of the RCMP vessel Dufferin, said he took up a position at Rhodes Island in Cypress Bay July 14. The next morning, his vessel and three other RCMP craft moved west at 6:50 a.m. and at 7:18 a.m. an object appeared on the radar and suddenly the Weatherly appeared 30 yards in front in dense fog.

He gave chase and in a few minutes secured his vessel alongside the Weatherly.

He said there was no trouble from the people found on the Weatherly, they were very co-operative and two or three of them were jovial.

He said he had seen the Weatherly before and it wasn't outfitted for commercial fishing although it was capable of being used for sports fishing.

It was 11½ miles from Shelter Inlet to where the Weatherly was stopped, he said.

Cpl. Joseph Macdonald, an RCMP dogmaster, said he was aboard the RCMP vessel Duncan when the Weatherly was stopped.

He said he saw a large plastic garbage bag thrown from the Weatherly which he retrieved from the water, along with two small clear plastic bags.

He gave all three to Sgt. David Rossander, in charge of the identification section of Port Alberni RCMP, who testified they contained green vegetation like soil.

He turned them over to Constable Gary Appleton of the RCMP drug squad who said they contained a green, leafy substance which he turned over to the crime laboratory in Vancouver.

Capt. Gerry Zanussi, navigator of a Canadian Armed Forces Argus aircraft, said his craft took over surveillance of a vessel from the U.S. Coast Guard at 1:35 p.m. July 14.

A member of the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration, Michael Garland, said he was involved in tracking the Toernyn up the American coast until surveillance was turned over to Canadians.

Judge Peter Millward adjourned the trial until Monday morning after telling the jury it was his intention to run the trial four days a week, rather than the full five, while the pace remained on schedule.

Youngsters Have Designs On Their Rooms

By JANE GENIESSE

NEW YORK — Eleven-year-old Michael Sid's mother was home with a sore throat so she missed his march to the podium. But 12-year-old Matilda Prevost's mother was there, giving Matilda occasional squeezes and offering to hold her trophy for her. As for Lori Spielman, who is 10, the occasion seemed a good time to announce: "I like designing things my way. You know, not my mother's way, my way."

Designing rooms to suit oneself (as opposed to mothers, fathers, teachers or similar know-it-all sorts) was precisely what the "My Room" Design Contest, sponsored by the Police Athletic League, was all about. And Michael, Matilda and Lori were just three contestants in an auditorium full of young participants who gathered the other day at the Fashion Institute of Technology here to receive their prizes.

Out of more than 1,000 entries, 130 were finally chosen. It took two long tables to show off the impressive variety of model rooms, decorated with furniture made with everything from Good Humor sticks and MacDonald's hamburger wrappers to pipe cleaners and toothpicks.

As to the difficulty of making a choice between such imaginative offerings, well, it had the judges shaking their heads. And they, being qualified professionals from the American Society of Interior Designers, were certainly in a position to be appreciative.

"They were all so good, it was unbelievable," said Joseph Freitag, president of the designer society's New York Chapter. It reminded him, he said, that growing up can be positively deleterious to the creative spirit. "You need a certain degree of immaturity, of freedom from responsibility, to be creative. If you're too bound down by practical considerations . . ." Freitag did not finish. Instead he looked concerned over the implications.

Along with Michael, Matilda and Lori, three other youngsters also won best-of-show awards. All were given $25 savings bonds.

The youngest, eight-year-old Marlo Eaton, had designed a room that she called "My Disco Dream World." Featuring wire disco figures dancing on a revolving disk as a wire banjo player strummed, Marlo's room was unquestionably original in concept. To a literal-minded grownup who was tedious enough to inquire where she expected to sleep, Marlo retorted hotly: "My room doesn't have to be a bedroom!"

Paul Esposito, the best-of-show winner in the 9-year-old category, did have a bedroom in mind, but not the garden variety kind. Calling it "My Underwater Sea Kingdom," he had sea horses and conch shells clinging to a net strung over the ceiling, an aquarium, a sea chest, and, yes, a bed.

He Tells When Right Up Front

By BERNADINE MORRIS

PARIS — Jean-Francois Crahay had the nerve to put it up front. Right under the Lanvin name on his press release is the information "Pre-War Nostalgia 1938-39 Silhouette." You know right where you stand. No turning around and asking your neighbor, "What year are we in?"

The nice thing about 1938-39 fashions is that they endured. Norman Norell was making them on Seventh Avenue right up to his death in 1972, especially the narrow skirt with the set-in waistband and little gathers all around it. It's the only way to make a narrow skirt that looks reasonably well on a lot of women.

One reason the clothes endured was the war itself. Because of the German occupation of Paris, many dressmakers closed their doors. The others weren't terribly inspired by making clothes for German officers' women. So the pre-war fashions continued basically intact until Dior came along with his New Look in 1947.

"There is my wedding dress," Helene de Turkheim, the writer for Le Figaro, exclaimed as a wrapped chiffon dress with ruffles up the front of the skirt appeared. "It was 1941," she explained. The background music for the showings, however, was not confined to 1938. It included the songs she and her friends danced to during the war years. The 1979 bride marched down the runway to the strains of Glenn Miller's Sunrise Serenade.

The styles that bridged the 40-year gap best were the suits, which have been gaining momentum in the contemporary scene for a year or so and promise to enjoy their own revival in the spring. The 1938 shapes, according to Crahay, that are best for today have a hip-bone-length jacket, cut away slightly at the hem in front, and a narrow skirt, or are a trifle fuller and longer at the top and have a flared skirt. They were called "swing skirts" in those days. The blouses under both types tended to be sleeveless, with the full butterfly bows in front that came to be a Norell trademark. Another suit had a shapely jacket that curved through the waist like Dior's. It was best in white with a black skirt.

Big-brimmed, shallow-crowned hats with veils, garden party prints in soft, floppy dresses and flowers in the hair for evening helped set the period mood, as did the potted palms and the piansit in white tie.

Crahay, who celebrated his 60th birthday at least year's Lanvin show, managed his remembrance of things past very well, but he wasn't the only designer in this year's shows who was rummaging around in fashion history.

There was, for instance, Andre Courreges, the enfant terrible of the last decade, doing his best to revive the 1960's. "I'm going to be true to myself," he declared, running around before the show in a pink sweatsuit. He meant returning to the pure, architectural style that set the mood for clothes in 1963.

The Travel Discount Route

Youth on the Move

By LUCY IZON

Have you been missing out on hundreds of travel discounts available to young people? Whether you're a student or not you can easily make yourself eligible for a wide range of reduced rates and here's how to do it.

If you have an International Youth Hostel Card, you can use it for transportation and admission discounts in 15 countries. Take your card to the Egyptian Youth Hostel Association, for instance, and you can obtain a 50 per cent reduction on rail fares. Present it at the Netherlands YH offices and you're eligible for reduced prices on air fares from Amsterdam, Brussels and Luxemburg to points in Europe and overseas. In Israel YH members can expect reduced prices at all historical sites and national parks under the supervision of the National Parks Authority.

To get the best value out of your card, always ask about special concessions at local hostel offices. The countries where you'll get such discounts are Austria, Denmark, Egypt, Finland, France, Germany, Israel, Italy, Japan, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, Portugal and Sweden.

Also, this year you can be eligible for special rates in 28 countries just for being a student. An International Student Identity Card is your passport to these bargains. The card entitles you to reduced air fares in Europe, Asia, Africa and the Pacific plus discounts at museums, concerts and stores. That's a good return for an investment of a few dollars.

These ISIC cards are the only internationally recognized document of proof that you are a bona fide student. Your regular student ID card issued by your school will work at some historical tourist sights abroad but because they're easy to duplicate they're not accepted by many establishments.

When you travel with an ISIC card it's wise to carry an official letter from your school as an extra protection if there is a crackdown on phoney identification.

By using an ISIC card I once saved more than 50 per cent of the regular fare flying British Airways from Athens to London. But that's just the beginning of the deals you can get. For example, this year you can save 25 to 30 per cent on rail fares in Austria and if you're heading to Cyprus you could stay at one of several Greek Orthodox monasteries for two nights free.

In Spain ISIC card holders are eligible for special rates on domestic air travel, which means the Canary Islands may now be within reach of your budget. Hong Kong's student travel office will help you find a hotel or a tour at a 25 to 30 per cent reduction. Touring in France? Discounts are offered at all national museums, most historical sites, theatres, concert halls and cinemas.

To be eligible for an ISIC card you must be a full-time student at an institution of higher learning or a high school. When you apply for this international identification, you must prove your student status in the form of a student card, an official letter from your school or, in the case of high school students, a report card. You also have to provide a passport photo.

Being a student also makes you eligible for some terrific air fare bargains through SATA, the Student Air Travel Association. Its flights are not cut-price night flights or off-peak fares but trips on aircraft specially chartered to fly on student routes. SATA flights operate between 38 major cities in the world.

This summer's fares will be announced in a few weeks. If last year is any indication, they'll be about a third of the ordinary cost and popular dates will sell out quickly.

Now that you know all the advantages to being a student, where does that leave you if you're not? Rest easy, there are still some good bargains available, as long as you're under 26. The answer to your problem is the FIYTO Card. Not only does it have its own list of worldwide discounts — it looks and works remarkably like a student card.

FIYTO cards entitle you to discounts in 24 countries. You can obtain reduced rates on international transportation by air, overland and by sea. You can also get discounts at hotels, tourist sites, theatres, and museums. This year, a FIYTO card can be used for a 50 per cent reduction on Air Alps in France; a 30 per cent reduction on car ferry service between Italy and Egypt; 25 per cent off fares on Yugoslav state railways and discounts off bicycle rentals in London.

When you purchase a FIYTO card, ask for an international concessions list. If you don't purchase one before your trip the cards and lists are available at International hostelling offices and some youth travel bureaus abroad.

Youth Clinic

Young readers' questions on human relations and sex are answered by a panel of experts: Saul Levine, psychiatrist; Marion Powell, medical doctor; Graham Cotter, clergyman; and Bruce Vichert, social worker. Send questions to Youth Clinic, The Victoria Times, 2621 Douglas St., Victoria, B.C., V8W 2N4.

DEAR DR. LEVINE: I am an 18-year-old girl. Every time my boy friend tries to kiss me, or touch me, I panic. He's not the first boy I've had this problem with. It's happened with any guys who have taken me out. I wasn't so worried when I was younger, but I'll soon be 19. I really like this guy I'm going out with now, but how long will he take me out when he can't even kiss me?

ANSWER: There are many young people like you who fear the implications of kissing and touching. It may have to do with what you were taught while growing up, some scary things you may have heard, or some misconceptions you may have. It may be related to fears that you have about "performing" sexually, an increasing — and unnecessary — problem in our society. It may also have something to do with your difficulties with intimacy. That is, what does a kiss or a touch MEAN to you? Finally, it may be related to some psychological problem for which kissing is just a "cover."

If you have a good relationship with your present boyfriend, you may want to discuss it with him. He may be able to help you by "going slow," and by reassuring you. You might confide in your parents, if you feel good about their advice and good sense. Friends sometimes can be a help. Unfortunately, many young people are reluctant to share their fears with those closest to them. Finally, professional counselling might well prove useful. Counsellors, teen clinics, psychiatrists etc., might be consulted with confidence, to see exactly what the nature of your problem is, and what can be done to get you over this hurdle.

DEAR DR. COTTER: I am two years older than my sister and we don't get along. Tonight Mom asked her to do the dishes and me to dry. Our fights usually start over little things like not putting the silverware in the proper container.

I'm not saying I'm perfect, and I know I add to the fight, but she swears and says other things that hurt so badly. Today I got really fed up because my father's always saying to be more mature and patient. I slapped her across the back and we both got grounded. It hurts me because I see my parents hurt. I have a lump in my throat all the time.

ANSWER: Obviously the old individual approach and telling people they should not do things does not work alone, or the world would have been converted to its best behavior long ago. Not only you and your sister, but your parents need help.

Since you are the one being offended, and your parents do not understand, you must take a stand. Demand that you be separated from her on every possible occasion. Do the dishes alone rather than with her; refuse to sit near her at the table; refuse to be in the same bedroom. Do not talk to her, politely or otherwise.

Keep this up until your parents realize the situation is serious.

DEAR MR. VICHERT: I am an 18-year-old guy who has a problem most teenage guys have. Why do girls our age go out with guys who are in their 20s? I just went through my second relationship with a girl younger than me (17). We broke up, not just because she was going out with a 24-year-old guy, but because she lied to me about it. What can be said or done to attract girls from the older guys back down to us?

ANSWER: I agree it hurts to be lied to. You may have been right to end the relationship, because if there isn't trust between two people there isn't much hope for the relationship.

Some girls mature faster than boys of their own age and this may be one reason why girls find an older male more appealing. Others may feel that it makes them feel more grown-up, or it may make then feel that they have more status. Of course, it may be that they genuinely like the older person. I cannot offer you a solution except to say that one of these days you will be the "older man"

your health

By L. L. Coleman, MD

Last November, while hospitalized for an acute attack of diverticulitis, my physician called in a surgeon who stated that I needed surgery. Several months later, I had a second opinion by another surgeon. He looked over my X-rays obtained from the hospital, examined me and then promptly stated that surgery was not now required. Now that I have this difference of opinion I am completely confused and would like to know where I go from here. — Mrs. C.L.R., N.Y.

DEAR MRS. R.:

As I review your letter, I realize that you actually had three opinions: one from your first surgeon, one from yourself, and one from the next surgeon. Also, it is obvious that it was you who chose not to have the surgery.

You state that "several months later" you sought that additional opinion. At the time of your acute attack of diverticulitis, your condition may have been totally different than when you presented yourself to the second surgeon. The old X-rays portrayed the exact picture that existed when you were hospitalized. Although valuable then, they did not necessarily portray the picture that existed when you were examined by the second surgeon several months later.

I have implicit faith in the value of a second opinion. I doubt that I would allow surgery to be performed on me without the benefit of a second opinion. Yet I would not do it as you did. I would have asked for a second opinion at the time of the acute attack in the hospital.

The ideal way of getting a second opinion is to have your own physician call in another expert. After complete examination, the two surgeons and your doctor meet for consultation. If all doctors agree, then the procedure is clearly defined. If they do not agree, then a third surgeon can be the deciding factor.

Scared, Pregnant? Birthright Helps

elizabeth forbes

If you are pregnant and you're scared, resentful, angry and distressed;

If social or economic pressures are forcing you to consider an abortion;

If you are looking for someone who will listen and really understand how scared and sick and confused you are;

Birthright Victoria will help you.

Birthright gives person-to-person help to girls and women distressed by problem pregnancies with which they can't cope.

For some this means just a sympathetic listening and counselling and guiding to appropriate social agencies.

But for the majority it means personal, practical help given all through pregnancy, and even after birth.

Birthright was founded in 1968 by a Toronto housewife, Mrs. Louise Summerhill. Its a non-political, non-secretarian counselling service that offers distressed pregnant women and girls practical alternatives to abortion.

It has chapters throughout Canada and in the United States, all providing initial and necessary person-to-person help.

Joan Warren, head of the Victoria Chapter, explains that Birthright is staffed entirely by volunteers. It receives no government or community grants and it is maintained, here and in every other centre, entirely by donations from churches and private donors.

"We believe it is the right of every pregnant woman to give birth and the right of every child to be born," Mrs. Warren explains.

"The work of Birthright is to protect and preserve that right through helping to solve any problem that might make it difficult for a distressed pregnant girl or woman to carry her baby for the full term."

Those problems, as she sees them, can be financial, legal, medical, psychiatric or they may involve employment, accommodation, immigration or adoption.

Birthright Victoria has its headquarters in Room 115, Yarrow Building, 819 Fort Street. That room is open six days a week from 12 noon until 3 p.m., except Fridays, when the hours are 12 noon until 5 p.m. The telephone is 384-1431.

Counselling is kept on a first-name basis and it is confidential in every respect.

Since the Victoria Chapter was formed in 1971, dozens of girls and women have been quietly helped, among them frightened teen-agers, married women with children who feel they cannot face another full pregnancy and even some women caught in a pregnancy during menopause.

Counselling has also been given girls and women who have had abortions and are terrified as they face the possibility of another one.

"When a girl or a woman comes to us she gets positive help," Mrs. Warren says.

"Often the most important thing we can give is friendship and moral support when it is needed most.

"At the same time we have found work for those who want it and homes here, and in other parts of Canada for those who wish to leave Victoria.

"We've arranged medical and sometimes psychiatric care through doctors and hospital clinics and we've given advice on financial, marital and legal problems."

"We also give pregnancy tests free of charge and we do have maternity clothes and baby layettes that are available without charge."

In other words, Mrs. Warren is saying — give life a chance and we'll help you every step of the way. No questions asked, no judgements made, no strings attached.

Help Needed — In order to continue effectively helping the girls and women who come to them, Birthright desperately needs more volunteers.

They are needed for counselling in the office (after a short training session), for telephone counselling in the evenings and for assistance with pre-natal care.

There is also need for homes for some girls where they can become part of the family, especially during the last few months of pregnancy, and where they can fit in as mother's helpers or as companions to elderly persons.

"The girls want to feel they are being helpful and, in turn, what they really need is friendship and encouragement," Mrs. Warren points out.

Finally, as I imagine you have guessed, there is need for necessary funds, on a continuing basis, if Birthright is to continue to provide the service it has been giving.

At present Victoria chapter's monthly overhead is around $300.

"So far something always turns up to enable us to meet that commitment," Mrs. Warren says, "So, people must care."

dear abby

DEAR ABBY: How does a 28-year-old man get rid of a 30-year-old woman who refuses to take no for an answer?

I took Alice (made up name) for a weekend of skiing because the girl I had planned to take got the flu and couldn't go. The hotel reservations were paid for in advance and I didn't feel like going alone.

Well, Alice took the weekend far too seriously, and now she insists she's "in love" with me even though I never told her I loved her. In fact, I told her up front I didn't want any serious commitments.

As soon as we returned, Alice started calling and writing me love letters. In order to discourage her, I told her I was engaged to a girl in California. (Not true.) She kept after me, so I told her I was gay and went both ways, but she said she didn't care.

Abby, I have absolutely no interest in this woman. I only went to bed with her because she expected me to and I didn't want to disappoint her. Any suggestions. She's making me crazy. STUPID.

DEAR STUPID: If Alice reads the Rocky Mountain News, you could be off the hook by nightfall. If not, be a man and tell her that what happened did not mean to YOU what it meant to HER, that the chemistry is not right for a lasting love affair, and to cool it. Be gentle — but firm.

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I are planning to take our first vacation away from our children. We have a 17-year-old son and two daughters, 8 and 11.

We're leaving the girls with relatives, and our problem is what to do about our son. He assures us he is able to stay home alone, and wants to.

We trust our son, but I tend to be on the nervous side and don't know if I could handle it if anything were to happen to him while we were away. He's a good kid who does what he's told — if I'm around to check on him. His father has always left the discipline and raising of the kids to me, but Dad has a short fuse and, if anything goes wrong, it's my fault.

In your opinion, should we leave our son alone in the house for 10 days. UNDECIDED.

DEAR UNDECIDED: Your letter suggests that you lack sufficient confidence in your son to insure a worry-free vacation — otherwise why would you have written to me?

A good rule to folow: When in doubt — DON'T.

Meteorites: Pennies from Heaven?

THE MOTHER EARTH NEWS

...it tells you how

Each year thousands of falling stars penetrate the earth's atmosphere and fall to its surface. Not only is this an intriguing experience visually, but it also could profit you financially. Mother Earth reader Charles Webb tells how:

They're lured from their orbits in the asteroid belt between Jupiter and Mars by the gravitational pull of the sun, and some of them are then attracted to the earth.

When they arrive at night, their descent into our planet's atmosphere is marked by bright streaks of light, sometimes white and sometimes a variety of other colors which usually end in red (the changes are a direct indication of temperature and velocity). Daytime arrivals are traced by what appear to be trails of smoke or dust.

These displays of aerial "fireworks" and "skywriting" frequently are accompanied by thunder-like rumbles or an explosion.

Some of these meteorites (pieces of a larger meteoroid that fall to the earth's surface in a streak of light called a meteor), colloquially called shooting stars, burn up in our atmosphere and never reach the earth. Many others (thousands annually), DO make it all the way to the earth. How does that affect you? A number of individuals and institutions are eager to BUY these rocks. You'll never get rich catering to the market, but you can pick up some extra bucks.

There are approximately 80 known varieties of meteorites, and they're generally lumped into three categories: stony, iron, and stony-iron.

The most common of the three are the stony meteorites which, as the name implies, are composed either entirely or mainly of stony minerals. The average stony also contains between 5 and 15 per cent nickel-iron, and some go as high as 25 per cent.

Iron meteorites — the second most common type of "falling star" — are almost 100 per cent nickel-iron. And the rarest meteorites of all — the stony-irons — are about 50/50 nickel-iron and stony material.

All three classes of meteorites (except for some rare stonies that contain no nickel-iron) generally are attracted by a magnet. Most of the time, too, a stony will be about 1½ times — and an iron approximately 3 times — heavier than ordinary earth rocks of the same size.

Leave "no stone unturned" in your search! Meteorites vary in size from a fraction of an inch across (weighing less than an ounce) to several feet in diameter (with a weight of more than 100,000 pounds).

If you see a meteorite fall nearby, you sometimes can get an approximate idea of how far away it has landed by counting the seconds from the time it vanishes behind trees, etc., to the time you hear it explode or impact on the ground. Each second represents about 1,000 feet.

To further track down a "falling star" that you or someone else has sighted, contact people who reside in the direction that the meteor was seen to go. Question each witness you find. Where was it in relation to local landmarks when it disappeared? How far away did it appear to be? Use every scrap of information you can get to zero in on the spot where the meteorite impacted.

Then again, nothing says that you have to wait until you or someone you know actually sees a falling meteorite before you can go out looking for one. Meteorites have been hitting the earth continually for billions of years and a thorough search of almost any large area of land probably will turn up one or more of the "outer space" rocks.

While a "find" (a meteorite that no one saw fall) generally isn't worth as much as a "fall" (a meteorite that was seen streaking toward earth), the going rate for even an extremely weathered specimen starts at $5 to $10 a pound.

While you'll never make a fortune searching for meteorites, a single good find can put several hundred dollars in your pocket, as well as give you some fun outdoors.

Some Compassion Needed in Pricing

What's in Store
Joan Watson

It seems to me that any woman who suffers the trauma of a mastectomy deserves prompt, practical assistance in rehabilitation.

This should include the fitting of a well-made flattering prosthesis as soon as possible after surgery. However, the costs are frequently prohibitive, as much as $350 for a bra and form.

For the woman who can't afford the morale booster of a well-made natural looking prosthesis, the consequence is discomfort, and an unflattering appearance.

Would you believe that many women make a form and fill it with birdseed to approximate the weight and size of a missing breast?

Mrs. Christina Smith, national convener for mastectomy patients of the Canadian Cancer Society, says she's heard of it. The seed is wrapped in a plastic covering and tucked into a padded bra.

She says if prices continue to rise for properly fitted forms, that might be all many patients can afford.

Another woman who mentioned the bird seed model was Karen Hirsch of the New Reflection Mastectomy Boutique in Toronto. She had one caution about them: don't wear them while swimming.

Many people who need a prosthesis, and many officials of the Cancer Society, feel that insurance policies or the government should help pay the cost of proper devices. It's not just a vanity. The wrong device can cause a reaction, depending on the type of surgery performed and the type of prosthesis used.

Mrs. Smith says most mastectomies are done on patients in their 20s, 30s, and 40s, just the years that they most need proper fitting for both mental health and physical health.

The alternative, implantation, cannot always be done, nor do some doctors recommend it. They think that if cancer recurs, they won't be able to find it because of the implantation of a false breast under the skin. And yet curiously, there's more financial help available for breast implantation than for the woman who chooses to buy breast form and bra.

There is some help available for patients on welfare or those in desperate need, and a few insurance plans cover a prosthesis, but the price is a real hardship for many women.

A column reader wrote to tell me that she is mounting a campaign to impress on the Department of National Health and Welfare the necessity of providing financial assistance to rehabilitate women who have had breast surgery, and to continue to subsidize them, because for the rest of their lives they will have to replace the forms at costs ranging from $19 to $350 per fitting. And the few lower priced models are satisfactory for only a small number of women.

My correspondent says: "Having become incensed about what I consider a flagrant rip-off in the cost of breast prostheses, I have decided to bring the matter before the Department of Health. When I see the dozens of women at Princess Margaret Hospital (Toronto's cancer hospital) I cannot help but wonder how on earth 75 per cent of them could afford these things. But from the point of view of morale, it is most necessary that woman should look normal. Believe me, I know. I am one of them. The garment manufacturers have bombarded the public with their bra advertising propounding the beauty of women's breasts. It's traumatic to have one amputated."

As seven thousand Canadian women will join the ranks of mastectomy victims this year, perhaps it's time for a manufacturer to lower prices as a compassionate gesture.

VIC Seeking Big Budget Boost

The Greater Victoria Visitor Information Centre is looking for substantial budget increases over the next four years to fund a campaign aimed at making tourism the biggest business around.

In a presentation to Victoria council's finance committee, Thursday, VIC president Ed Higgin outlined a proposal that would see the centre's budget increase sharply to $219,000 from $153,435 last year.

And by 1982 Higgin wants to see the centre operating with a budget of $416,000.

"Tourism has to be treated like a business," he said, "we have to go out there and draw them in."

He said tourism is vital to the area's economic health, but the four core municipalities haven't been treating the subject seriously enough.

A major portion of the centre's budget comes from municipal grants, and Higgin said he wants to see the core municipalities putting a lot more into the pot.

Under a cost-sharing formula worked out by the VIC, Higgin said Victoria's share of the proposed 1979 budget would be $24,500. That's up only $500 from last year, and Mayor Mike Young said he saw no problem in awarding such a grant.

But Young warned that the city would not be prepared to met any shortfalls brought about if the other municipalities declined to pay their shares.

Young said he sympathized with the centre but the city isn't going to carry anybody else's load.

"We will do as much as we can for the Visitor Information Centre but what we'll do in terms of money I just don't know," said the mayor.

Under the new VIC formula, Saanich would be hit hardest, with a grant request of $23,500. Last year Saanich gave only $3,000.

Oak Bay's share would jump to $6,300 from $1,560 and Esquimalt would go to $5,580 from $600.

Higgin said the cost-sharing formula had been worked out largely on the basis of where people who work in the tourist industry live.

He said Victoria has been carrying its fair share but the others have been getting off lightly in the past.

Higgin admitted, however, he wasn't confident Oak Bay, Esquimalt or Saanich will meet the request for increased funding.

"We are in a quandary," he said. "We must reach that figure ($60,000 in total grants). This is essential."

Tax Ruling Means $3,600 To Victoria

Victoria will be able to start collecting municipal business taxes on provincial government commercial buildings if a B.C. Court of Appeals decision handed down Thursday stands up.

The court has dismissed a provincial appeal against Judge M.L.T. Drake's decision last year that the province must pay business tax to municipalities.

The decision can still be appealed to the Supreme Court of Canada.

The ruling, if it stands, will mean only about $3,600 a year in taxes to the city but other communities throughout the province will also benefit from the precedent-setting case.

Vancouver, for example, would collect about $250,000 a year in business taxes from liquor stores and a large liquor wholesale warehouse.

Blencoe Back On Library Ad

Ald. Bob Wright was called cheap and nasty today by one of his colleagues on city council.

Ald. Robin Blencoe attacked Wright because of statements Wright had made Thursday concerning newspaper ads which offer the old library building for sale.

Earlier this week Blencoe had accused Wright and Mayor Mike Young of improperly authorizing the ads, saying it was a matter that should have been dealt with by council.

But Wright replied to that criticism by saying he'd become aware of the ads after the decision to run them had been made by municipal staff.

Wright added, however, that he supported the ads because it was made clear that none of the offers need be accepted.

He said the ads had been placed so that city hall administrators could provide some figures when council began to debate the future of the old building, located at Yates and Blanshard.

But Blencoe says Wright is misleading the public over the issue and trying to shift the blame onto civic employees who can't speak out.

"It's very easy to blame civil servants because they can't respond publicly. I think it's cheap and nasty to turn on city administrators.

"To indicate by innuendo that municipal administrators did this (placed ads) on their own is reprehensible. Too often civil servants get blamed by squirming politicians."

Blencoe added that he feels the old library building should not be sold but should be put to some public use.

ICBC Safe Driving Minimum Dropped

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Insurance Corp. of British Columbia is dropping the requirement that a driver must contribute to the Autoplan fund for a minimum of six months before being entitled to a safe driving discount.

The Crown corporation said Thursday that beginning Sept. 1, the discount will be based solely on an individual's driving record.

It said in a news release that those who will benefit most are young drivers with safe driving records, people buying a second vehicle, new residents with safe driving records and people returning to the province after an absence.

"Did they name you 'Grandma' when you were a baby?"

Contract Bridge B. Jay Becker

With both sides vulnerable, you hold the following hand:

♠K94 ♡8 ◇KJ954 ♣AQ73

1. Your partner bids One Club and you resond One Diamond. Partner then bids Three Clubs. What would you bid now?

2. You open One Diamond and partner's response is Two Notrump. When you then bid Three Clubs, partner bids Three Notrump What would you bid now?

3. Your left-hand opponent opens One Heart, your partner bids One Spade, and your right-hand opponent bids Two Hearts. What would you bid now?

4. Your partner opens Three Hearts and the next player passes. What would you bid now?

* * *

1. Four Notrump. A grand slam is extremely likely if your partner has three aces, and the surest way of learning whether or not partner has them is by making use of Blackwood. There is very little risk attached to this bid, since your partner is certain to have either two or three aces. If he hasn't, get yourself a new partner! If the response to four notrump is five hearts, indicating only two aces, bid six clubs. If the response to four notrump is five spades, indicating three aces, bid seven clubs.

2. Pass. Your distribution is unattractive for notrump, but all you can reasonbly do is pass. You have warned partner against notrump by bidding three clubs, and he has said in effect that nine tricks in notrump are more likely than eleven tricks in a minor suit. Partner should not be surprised that you have a singleton somewhere. Your three club bid informed him of that possibility.

3. Four spades. To bid less than four would be an affront to partner. True, you'd like to have a fourth trump, but the good Lord didn't deal you one. Your 13 high-card points and the singleton heart more than compensate for the missing fourth trump. Besides, your partner's spade overcall implicitly suggested he had at least five of them.

No good purpose could be served by bidding either of your minor suits. This would merely cloud the issue and could lead to trouble. A three-spade bid would merely urge but not force your partner to bid again.

4. Pass. It normally takes two opening bids, or their equivalent, to make a game. While you have a sound opening bid — now weakened, of course, by the misfit in hearts — you know that partner has far less than normal high-card values; otherwise, he would not have started with a preemptive bid. A reasonable prognostication is that partner will either make three hearts or go down one.

By J. A. H. HUNTER

Tom smiled. "The lottery, eh? I'd forgotten about it, but why lucky?"

"Just something special about it," the boy replied. "If you add the square of its last three digits to twice the rest of it you get one less than double the number."

What is it?

Evans Reprieved Hours from Death

ATMORE, Ala. (AP) — Condemned murderer John Louis Evans, who was down to his last meal, his last shower, and his last words of love to his family before being spared from electrocution, now must decide whether to fight his execution.

Evans, six hours from death today in Alabama's electric chair, burst into tears Thursday evening when he learned of his reprieve — a stay of execution he had not asked for.

Justice William Rehnquist of the U.S. Supreme Court — acting on an appeal from Evans's mother, Betty Evans — ordered the execution delayed at least until April 13.

The decision brought an explosion of cheers from death-row convicts at Holman prison and words of grief from death-penalty advocates who had assembled near the prison.

Foes of capital punishment held candles aloft in the night and sang We Shall Overcome. Clergymen describing themselves as "biblical fundamentalists" said the court has turned its back on God's rule of "a life for a life."

Evans, a 29-year-old Texas native, had repeatedly asked for death to end what he called "a hell on earth in prison."

On the day before his scheduled execution — which would have been the first in the United States since Gary Gilmore faced a Utah firing squad Jan. 17, 1977 — Evans voiced repentence for "a wasted life" and seemed firm in his resolve to go ahead with the electrocution.

But with the stay, there were signs Evans might change his mind. Rev. Kevin Duignan, his closest friend in recent months and the man who told him of the stay, said Thursday night he still believes Evans will view the court's action as "a message from God" to try to live.

Rehnquist's decision to put off the electrocution until next Friday at 5 p.m. was qualified. He said he himself would vote against a stay but, due to the "obviously irrevocable nature of the death penalty," wanted the full court to hear the pleadings.

Bitter Sinai Settlers Jeer Begin

Times News Services

Prime Minister Menachem Begin faced bitter anger and insults Thursday in the northeast Sinai from Israeli settlers who must pack up and leave their farms within three years under terms of the Egyptian-Israeli peace pact.

"I know you are hurting," Begin told incensed settlers in the town of Yamit. "I am also grieving, but all we did was only for the sake of peace and the future of the people of Israel and the land of Israel."

In Cairo, Egyptian Prime Minister Mustafa Khalil told Parliament that East Jerusalem should be headquarters for the proposed autonomous authority of the 1.1 million Palestinians who live in the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

He added that negotiations to establish Jerusalem as the Palestinian centre will be "hard, arduous, and long."

Shouts of "Go Home" and "Cheat" echoed through the Yamit community centre interrupting Begin's remarks, but the prime minister said, "I take the insults with love.

"There was no other way to achieve a peace treaty that would offer a promise of peace for our people. There's no turning back now. We signed a peace treaty and we must honor it," he said.

Yamit, a town of 2,000 that grew out of the white sand dunes of the northern Sinai coastline, is among 16 settlements to be surrendered to Egypt with in three years.

Khalil expounded Egypt's views on the West Bank and Gaza in an address to Parliament Thursday, saying it encompasses all territories and towns in the region — including East Jerusalem, which Israel captured in 1967.

Khalil urged Palestinians to participate in the negotiations. Diplomats say without Palestinian participation, the autonomy scheme probably will never see the light of day.

A similar appeal was issued hours earlier by President Anwar Sadat who said in an address to Parliament, "Demonstrations will not expel the occupier and slogans will not solve the problem."

Meanwhile, it was learned today that Israel hopes to drain most of the natural gas from a Sinai Desert field — with reserves worth about $125 million — before it reverts to Egyptian control in three years under terms of their peace treaty.

Energy Minister Yitzhak Modai told of the plan in an Israel Television interview. He said Israel is building a $5-million pipeline to pump the gas from the field in northern Sinai, about 40 kilometres south of the Gaza Strip, to an existing distribution line in Israel.

Israel will pump about $25 million worth of gas a year, Modai said.

Prices Spiral Has Carter Worried

WASHINGTON (WP) — Continuing sharp increases in food and industrial prices pushed wholesale prices up another 1 per cent last month, providing further evidence that many small and medium-size firms may be breaching the Carter administration's price guidelines.

The unusually sharp rise, following increases of 1 percent in February and 1.3 percent in January, brought the pace of inflation for the first three months of this year to an annual rate of 14.1 percent — the steepest quarterly jump in five years.

The increase, while expected, dealt another severe blow to the administration, which has been trying to persuade unions to hold their wage increases to 7 percent or less despite the recent surge in prices. There already are strikes in the trucking and airline industries.

White House reaction to the price report was muted. Presidential press secretary Jody Powell conceded that the March figures "certainly were not welcome news," and admitted the administration still had a long way to go in its effort to slow inflation.

Winter of Strikes Slops Into Spring

LONDON (AP) — Britain's long winter of strikes — a factor in the fall of the Labor government of Prime Minister James Callaghan — has slopped into spring with mail piling up at London post offices, cargo going nowhere at a London airport and 8,000 workers threatening to close the state-run automaker.

Leaders of 8,000 skilled workers for the state-owned auto firm British Leyland Ltd., called Thursday for a strike today, demanding a basic wage of $186 a week.

Michael Edwardes, chairman of Leyland, said that "if plants are forced to shut we cannot guarantee that they will reopen."

Some London mail deliveries were back to normal on Thursday, but militants continued their refusal to work overtime, causing a backlog of eight million letters.

Meanwhile, air freight piled up at London's Heathrow Airport when 80 customs men belonging to civil service unions went on an indefinite strike Thursday, and 22 civil servants who administer Britain's nuclear submarine base at Coulport in Scotland also went on strike.

The ministry of defence said deployment of Britain's nuclear deterrent would not be affected.

Also on Thursday, talks to get The Times newspaper back on newstands by April 17 have been jeopardized by the walkout of a key print union. Publication was suspended last Nov. 30 in a showdown over manning levels and automation.

Management has said The Times, which is controlled by Canadian Lord Thomson of Fleet, won't reappear until it gets full agreement with all the unions.

The breakdown came when a union negotiator objected to a reduction in machine room staff from 540 to 318 on Saturday nights.

Rhodesians Vote April 17 to 21

SALISBURY (AP) — The Rhodesian government will hold an election April 17 to 21 to pick the country's first black-majority parliament, a proclamation published today says.

The two-house legislature is expected to open in late May or early June, Registrar-General Eric Pope-Simmonds says.

The dates had been kept secret to prevent black nationalist insurgents from making advance plans to sabotage the election, which they claim will lead to only cosmetic black rule.

The Silverguard radial is guaranteed to last at least 45,000 miles. That's guaranteed mileage, not just a "performance rating" or estimate. Remember "Road Hazard" coverage? HOW TO WRITE

CLASSIFIED ACTION

AD

1—IT'S BEST to start your ad with the name of the article or service you have to offer. If you have an apartment, room, etc., for rent, or property for sale; start your ad with the location.

2—BE CLEAR. Readers respond more quickly and favorably by giving complete, definite information. Always include the price in your advertisement.

3—MAKE IT EASY for the reader-prospect to reach you. Always give your telephone number or your name and address. If you do not have regular hours, state a preferred time for the prospect to get in touch with you.

4—PLAY SAFE. You get the greatest reader attention by using consecutive insertions. A six-day order is best and costs less, and you can, of course, stop your ad as soon as you get the results you want. You pay only for the days your ad appeared. Lower yearly rates are available to those who wish to keep their services or products before the public.

5—PLACE YOURSELF in the reader's position and ask yourself what you want to know about your offer. The answer you give will make a good Want Ad.

6—GIVE YOUR PROSPECT every inducement you can with good copy. Classified action ad readers have the money and are already interested in buying the merchandise or service you have to offer; the details and information you give are the most important.

7—TO PLACE YOUR AD, call 386-2121, your direct line number to fast Want Ad action. A courteous, efficient advisor will be glad to help you word and place your order. And remember, Classified Action Ads afford you the most complete coverage. Telephones are open 8:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. Monday through Friday, 8:00 to 5:30 p.m. Saturday. Don't allow the reader to speculate.

He leadeth me beside the still waters
He restoreth my soul
He leadeth me in the path of righteousness for his name sake
Yea though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death
I will fear no evil
For thou art with me, thy rod and thy staff they comfort me
Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies
Thou anointest my head with oil
My cup runneth over
Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life and I will dwell in the House of the Lord forever.

Grow Vegetables in an Old Fish Tank

GARDENING
hilda beastall

A discarded fish tank as a form of terrarium can be used in the home for raising a colorful group of salad vegetables.

The conditions in this improvised terrarium would likely be ideal for the quick growth required for crisp radishes, flavorful chives and possibly a seedling or two of sweet marjoram.

First see that the base of the tank can be made waterproof. A metal tray (or plastic) is suitable. Clean the glass inside and out until spotless. Have ready either a sheet of glass or plastic to close the top for a few days while getting the plants started. A sheet of plastic wrap as used for storing food will substitute for glass.

For this project, total sealing of the enclosure is not necessary, so it is not important to exclude all air. However, maintaining a close atmosphere for a few days ensures the humidity needed to get the chives rooted and the seeds of radish and sweet marjoram germinated.

The plants chosen for this indoor gardening project will be visually beautiful in color and form as well as healthful additions to daily meals.

This is an idea occurring to me as readers want to know what seeds they can sow outdoors now. The choice is limited this early, but I thought "why not grow something interesting indoors while waiting?" The outline principles of terrarium growing apply, combined with what the suggested plants require under normal outdoor growing. I have not tried the idea nor have I seen it applied. But that is for you.

A small clump of chives can be bought now at most garden shops or a friend already with a start can take off a half dozen tiny white bulblets with no harm to the remainder.

For the radishes, choose a packet of Cherry Belle seeds for their short top growth and crisp small red roots, to be enjoyed when just about 1 cm across.

Radishes like a warm damp soil for growing quickly, being ready for use in about three weeks. When the small patch in the terrarium had been used, sow another, and continue as long as the chives and marjoram are usable. They will in time need cutting down a bit and then grown anew from the same roots. Radish seeds take five days to germinate outdoors, but probably three in the terrarium.

The herb sweet marjoram is a suggestion that may succeed in the same environment. You may want to sow three or four seeds, or buy a seedling plant; or you may prefer a small thyme plant which is just as attractive in growth and useful as flavoring.

Into the bottom tray put a mixture of small washed stones and crumbled pieces of charcoal from a wood fire. Depth should be judged to depth of container — an inch (2½ cm) deep in a 12 inch (30 cm) height container, or ¾ inch deep (1 cm) if less height.

Over this drainage material put mixture of fine soil with its humus and some sand, again judging the depth against height of container. A three inch (7½ cm) soil depth is minimum requirement.

For background "landscaping" choose a chunky piece of scrubbed rock; push down into soil at one side; in front goes the one little plant of sweet marjoram or thyme. You may like groundcover of stones.

The greatest space will be for sowing radish seeds. These must be put in singly or as near singly as possible. The red round roots will not develop if crowded. Barely cover the seeds with soil mixture but press lightly to make contact with the soil.

A fine misting with water is given, then the cover put in place. An opening at one end of the top is all right — it will prevent high condensation inside, but will retain enough humidity to keep things growing without constant watering.

Daylight in a window is good, or low overhead fluorescent lighting. The constant home temperature 19 to 21 deg. C is ideal for this suggested project of growing edibles in the home, attractively.

Golf Course Slump

A $5,000 revenue slump for Saanich's Cedar Hill golf course and driving range is predicted in this year's budget, and Mayor Mel Couvelier isn't too happy over the prospect.

When the item was discussed by council's budget committee Wednesday Couvelier noted that the revenue picture looked more gloomy despite the "horrendous sums of money" the municipality had spent on improvements to the course facilities in the last year.

"Isn't that pretty hard to defend?" he asked.

The 1979 draft budget projects revenues from the course and driving range of $343,510 and expenditures of $332,380, for a net income of $11,130. The corresponding figure for last year was $16,555.

Major improvements to the facilities have included a new driving range, pro shop and enlarged clubhouse.

Postal Robbery

COPENHAGEN (Reuter) — Two young men overpowered post office officials and escaped with $800,000, police said Wednesday. The robbery, the biggest in Danish history, took place in broad daylight as two postal officials were on their way to a Copenhagen bank.

Hotel Ready For the Blind

MONTREAL (CP) — The Hotel Bonaventure is offering bilingual braille menus in its restaurants as part of a new program to provide special facilities to blind guests.

The hotel has also installed braille signs in its elevators and organized special training sessions for its 400 employees in preparation for a convention of Lions Club International members next June. About 5,000 of the 40,000 Lions members are blind.

'Earliest, Best Tourist Season'

Victoria merchants are looking for the best tourist season ever to start on Good Friday, April 13, one month earlier than usual, Canada Employment Centre manager Wally Pickering said today.

Souvenirs and other tourist items are being moved on to the shelves by mid-month, 30 days earlier than last year.

Normally the tourist season begins around the Victoria Day weekend in May.

Pickering said merchants are also hopeful the season will last longer into the fall.

"The local business climate during March can best be described as a time to pause, reorganize and prepare for the busy tourist season ahead."

Pickering said the economy continued to strengthen during the past month with some remarkable gains, especially in the real estate industry.

Sales under the Multiple Listing Service totalled $17.5 million in the Victoria area during March, up 58 per cent from $11.1 million the previous March.

There were 265 real estate units sold during the month, up 42 per cent from 187 in the same month one year ago.

He said apartment vacancy rates have fallen to a low level and this should result in a new wave of apartment construction, which would help to reduce unemployment among tradesmen.

Retail sales in March were above last year's levels but not quite as vigorous as in February. Merchants were optimistic about April receipts, based on the expectation of an early tourist season, Pickering said.

A survey conducted by information officer Dan Bowes showed restaurant receipts in March were up as much as nine per cent over last year's level. Hotel and motel occupancy rates were also higher than last year.

During the last week in March there were a significant number of early bird tourists from California, Oregon and the prairie provinces.

Production remains at near-capacity in local sawmills and Victoria machine shops are beginning to get more work in support contracts. Two foundries reported significant sales of materials for repairing large machinery.

Burrard Yarrows Corp. reported it had 500 employees during March, up 50 from February. The total is expected to increase.

The Esquimalt Graving Dock is booked solidly through May 17 and further work is expected for the balance of the year.

Employment levels in the herring roe fishing reached only 200 instead of the expected 800, because much of the herring catch was lured away to other plants in a price war. Activity will be slow until the salmon seasons begings.

Construction is expected to continue to be slow until mid-summer.

There was a record total of 1,100 people employed in March picking the daffodil crop and greenhouse activity is increasing, especially for tomatoes, cucumbers and bedding plants.

Farm employment levels are expected to increase between now and June.

$25,000 Art Find

TORONTO (CP) — Two New York dealers paid $25,000 for a 19th-century French painting discovered in a Toronto home last fall. The landscape by Jean-Baptiste Camille Corot was purchased by a Toronto clothes buyer on a trip to Paris in the 1920s. It was found under a hatbox in a closet.

Presentation For Lucky Baby. . .

The Victoria Numismatic Society will present the parents of the first child born in Victoria in the Week of April 15-21 with a mint sealed presentation set of 1979 Canadian coins.

Fred Laidlaw, past president of the Victoria Numismatic Society, said the presentation coincides with Coin Week Canada.

"Both the Royal Jubilee and Victoria General hospitals are co-operating," Laidlaw said.

Peterson Is Grits' Choice

Lawyer Alan Peterson, 30, said it is an MP's responsibility to work closely with Victoria's economic development officer and the provincial government to bring new industry to the city and make use of federal programs to assist in business development.

Without naming Conservative Donald Munro, Peterson said the incumbent member, in the absence of strong representation in Ottawa, had allowed loss of industry and created a "one-horse riding."

Among the opportunities for the shipbuilding industry, he suggested, are the planned upgrading of the Government Graving Dock and warship construction program. It was also necessary to get the Trident aircraft factory located and operating to widen employment opportunities in the aerospace industry.

Peterson was elected unanimously, supported by a speech by Senator Ray Perrault, government leader in the senate and a Liberal election strategist.

Perrault said the government is considering a method of helping to finance convention centres, and gave encouragement that aid might be on the way for Victoria's proposed centre which has been discussed by the city and B.C. government.

"I have seen the plans. I think it's needed. I think it's great," Perrault said.

"It's important for a city like Victoria to have this kind of project go ahead."

Perrault also declared the federal government is not prepared to stand by while provinces allowed the medical profession to opt out of medicare. The poor and sick would be the losers, he said.

'Frustration' Over School

Poor communication between the school board and disgruntled parents is the root of the problem which has led to parents picketing St. Andrew's Catholic elementary school, board chairman Helen Jones said Thursday.

"All those parents must think what they are doing is right," she said in an interview.

"And I believe I'm right. Therefore there has to be a communication problem."

The parents began picketing the school at 1002 Pandora Thursday morning and claim they will continue to do so until the school board and the school's principal Joseph Murphy resign.

The parents involved agree with Mrs. Jones that there is a communication problem and add that this has caused frustration on the part of those who feel the administration of the school is inadequate and the childrens' education is suffering because of a lack of proper teaching aids.

Mrs. Jones, who has two children attending the school, disagrees with the slap at Murphy and the school's administration and although agreeing some classrooms need supplies she says every possible effort is being made to correct the problem.

Another order for supplies will be placed in May, she said.

She said things have been blown out of proportion.

If the people concerned come to a parish meeting scheduled for April 18 "with an open mind, everything will be put back in perspective."

One of the problems has been that ever since the private schools began receiving grants from the provincial government there has had to be more fiscal accountability. Therefore a lot of the principal's time and that of his secretary has been taken up putting the office in order.

On the question of the government grant of about $100,000, which the school received for the previous school year, Mrs. Jones said that money cannot be spent on supplies and providing things like a library.

It has to go for operating expenses and salaries, she said.

Some of the teachers and parents felt some of the money should have gone toward supplies.

Another charge by some of the parents is that Murphey, the principal, is not qualified for the job and has a problem communicating with the parents and children when problems arise.

Mrs. Jones disagreed with the qualification charge saying he has a Bachelor of Education degree from the University of Victoria and taught for five years in Eastern Canada.

She did agree, however, that he has a problem communicating with the parents and children but added she is pleased with his efforts to correct that situation.

"He came into a difficult situation," she said of Murphy, who was hired late last year.

Student Cons Given Awards

About 90 federal prison inmates in B.C. who are enrolled in university programs through the University of Victoria will get awards Saturday in separate ceremonies at the Matsqui Institution and the B.C. Penitentiary.

The inmates, whose tuition and expenses are paid by the federal government under a correctional education program, will receive book awards for exceptional performance.

Special awards will go to two of the students who have completed enough credits for a B.A. degree. The degrees will be conferred at the UVic convocation June 2.

Chairmen of all the university departments that have participated in the program and the supervisors of the four core courses in English, history, psychology and sociology have been invited to attend the ceremonies. Marjorie Bird, director-general of the inmate employment section of the federal penitentiary service will address the groups.

The UVic program of extended studies for prisoners started in 1972 as an experiment and is unique in Canada.

Originated by UVic doctoral graduate Dr. T.A. Parlett and Dr. Douglas Ayers, of the UVic's eductaion faculty, it is the only program offering senior level courses leading to a degree and the only one which employees faculty members who teach full-time at the two prisons.

Ayers says the program tends to draw students who are leaders in the prison environment and who usually develop into excellent students.

12-Year Sentence

MONTREAL (CP) — Michel De Varenne has been sentenced to 12 years in prison after pleading guilty today to the 82-day kidnapping of credit union officer Charles Marion in 1977 — the longest kidnapping for ransom in Canadian history.

De Varenne, 37, was also given a concurrent six-year sentence for attempted extortion of $1 million from the Caisse Populaire de Sherbrooke-Est, where Marion was loans Marion, and extortion of $50,000 from the Marion family.

Chief Judge Yves Mayrand of Sessions Court said he had to consider that De Varenne's decision to plead guilty had saved taxpayers at least $350,000 which might otherwise have been spent on a lengthy trial.

De Varenne pleaded guilty to the kidnapping and extortion charges after Crown prosecutor Pierre Sauve dropped charges of conspiracy and forcible detention which also stood against him

Snows and High Wind Claim Eight Lives

Times News Services

The worst storm of the year struck southern Ontario today, claiming at least eight lives.

Westerly winds blowing in gusts to near hurricane forces were reported in many areas and were expected to continue at close to 100 kilometres an hour until evening.

Visibility in eastern Ontario and the Lake Huron-Georgian Bay regions was close to zero in blowing snow. Snowbelt areas north and west of Toronto received 15 centimetres of snow.

In central Ontario heavy snowsqualls in the Sault Ste Marie region were expected to continue throughout the day. Heavy snows in the North Bay region overnight continued today and blowing snow became a driving hazard.

At least eight persons have been killed so far in storm-related accidents.

Provincial police in Woodstock said six persons died and another three injured in a two-vehicle crash on Highway 2, just outside that city.

And in Millbrook, just south of Peterborough, half a province away from Woodstock, police reported two persons killed when their car collided wih a tractor-trailer on Highway 115.

Driving conditions were reported to be hazardous in both areas at the time of the crashes, with drifting snow and high winds.

Meanwhile, a Canadian freighter, caught in heavy seas and gusty winds in icy Lake Erie, was breaking up and sinking today 18 miles off Ashtabula, Ohio, and its captain requested immediate rescue of the ship's 20-man crew, the U.S. Coast Guard said.

The Coast Guard sent a helicopter from Detroit to the 100-metre Labradoc, a freighter carrying 160,000 bushels of corn, and was making a last-ditch effort to rescue the crew. But the efforts were hampered by heavy seas and wind gusts in excess of 50 knots. The Coast Guard said there was the danger that the helicopter would encounter severe turbulence en route to the scene and also could be downed in the lake.

"The ship is breaking up in the lake and is taking on more water," a Coast Guard spokesman said. "The ship's captain has requested immediate evacuation for himself and the crew.

"There's a Canadian freighter near the scene, but it's doubtful it will be able to aid in the rescue because of the conditions. We're attempting to launch a helicopter from Detroit and if it makes it to the scene we will launch another. But until we're sure it gets there, the other helicopter will remain on the ground."

The Labradoc, which first reported trouble at 3:15 a.m., had been listing at 26 degrees to the port side, in seas in excess of 6 metres and taking on water faster than had been expected.

On the U.S. side of the Great Lakes, gusts of up to 115 kilometres an hour tore down power lines and trees, damaged buildings and darkened thousands of homes in northern and east-central Illinois, while frigid winds brought near-blizzard conditions to the region.

At least four deaths were blamed on the weather.

Baby Held For Debt

MANILA (AP) — A judge in the Philippines has ordered a hospital and a social worker to return a girl born almost three years ago and held by the hospital because the parents couldn't pay the bill.

"Babies are not chattel, and they cannot be made collateral to ensure payment of an indebtedness," Judge Willelmo Fortun ruled in Lingayen, the northern Philippines.

To convert a baby into collateral or security "would not only be inhuman, uncharitable and un-Christian, but also illegal and unconstitutional," he said.

Fortun's ruling upheld a habeas corpus motion by Elpidio and Erlinda Riola demanding that Nazareth General Hospital and government social worker Petra Garcia surrender the child.

Court records showed the baby was born Aug. 15, 1976, but because of illness had to spend its first eight months under treatment at the private hospital.

The bill amounted to more than $735, but the Riolas said they could pay only half as a down payment and promised to pay the rest. The hospital refused and turned the baby over to the social services ministry.

SHAGGIEST CUSTOMER that hairdresser Paul Bowman has every faced is this woolly mammoth the Provincial Museum is erecting in its new hall. Bowman will be trying to clip and tease musk ox hair into the style popular among mammoths when the ancient bogs of B.C. were their stomping grounds.

It's a Real Shaggy Mammoth Story

By PAUL MOSS
Times Staff

Victoria hairdresser Paul Bowman today visited the Provincial Museum for a trim-and-style appointment with his biggest, oldest and shaggiest customer — a woolly mammoth.

It was his first look at what's going to be (the pun is irresistible) a mammoth task.

"I haven't stopped laughing yet," Bowman said, as he got to work analyzing the prehistoric giant's locks and cautiously trying a tease here, a curl there.

Bowman said he was startled when a museum official phoned to book the appointment. Unisex hairstyles are one thing but a mammoth is, well, ridiculous.

He said the jokes and leg-pulls at the Fashion Focus salon in Nootka Court where he works have been coming thick and fast. For example:

"We do styles, perms, mammoths . . ."

Or "Bring your mammoth in for a hairstyling every two million years."

He added with a groan: "It's not going to stop for months."

But Bowman, who has been in the hair business for six years, said he's excited by the challenge of attempting to create the authentic finishing touch to what will be one of the star attractions of the Museum's new natural history gallery.

The figure, whose awesome bulk will be featured in a diorama at the entrance to the new gallery, is the only full-scale reconstruction of a woolly mammoth in North America.

A museum spokesman said these beasts which stomped the boggy lowlands of B.C., and ranged from as far north as Alaska down to Mexico, became extinct 6,000 to 12,000 years ago.

The styrofoam-on-plywood replica, designed and built under the supervision of museum taxidermist Richard Gibbs, is about to don an overcoat made up of the pelts of nine musk ox.

M-B Sets Records

The Vancouver-based forest industries giant reported net earnings of $100.9 million or $4.50 a share for the year, compared with net earnings of $60.6 million or $2.70 a share in 1977.

Radical Energy Plan for U.S.

Times News Services

WASHINGTON — If U.S. President Jimmy Carter's entire energy program goes into effect, it could change forever the way people south of the border use oil, burn gas, or even buy the thousands of products that come from petroleum.

Carter Thursday night, said he would gradually lift price lids on domestically produced crude oil, leading to total decontrol by mid-1981 — a goal long sought by the U.S. oil industry.

The action would help conserve oil by making it more expensive and also would provide a financial incentive to U.S. oil companies to seek and develop new oil fields, he said.

Administration officials said Carter's deregulaton plan would add four to five cents a gallon to the price of gasoline and other petroleum products by mid-1981. But other unofficial estimates put the total increase at up to 15 cents a gallon.

U.S.-produced oil now is held at about $9 for a 42-gallon barrel. Carter's plan would allow it to rise gradually to the world market price of about $15 a barrel.

Carter needs Congress' go-ahead for some parts of the program, but has the power to lift oil price controls and effect some of the other proposals.

— Gasoline prices will go up — maybe only a cent or so the first year but a lot of cents per gallon by 1983.

— Shopping and work places would be cooler in winter and warmer in summer as thermostat limits are imposed: 19 degrees for

Tickets to attend the drawing, and to see a free George C. Scott comedy Movie, Movie will be mailed out to 150 people who enter the contest early, whether they have the right answers or not. Readers are advised to enter by tonight at the latest to have a chance for the theatre tickets. But entries mailed later will continue to have a chance for the major prizes, if they have the right answers.

Young, Smith Pick Socreds

Two of Greater Victoria's best known civic politicians — Victoria Mayor Mike Young and Oak Bay Mayor Brian Smith — have signed up with the Socreds as potential provincial election candidates.

Young announced today he'll take a crack at obtaining a Socred nomination in the two-seat Victoria riding where Deregulation Minister Sam Bawlf is expected to run while Smith will seek the Oak Bay-Gordon Head nomination.

Conservative leader Vic Stephens went on to win the election and Smith said as a result of the public exposure Stephens has received because he is a party leader, the Oak Bay campaign will be a tough one.

"I think I'll be the underdog but I'm not worried about that," he said in an interview.

Young, who said he only made up his mind this morning, told reporters if he wins the nomination and a seat as an MLA, he will comtinue to serve as mayor until his term expires in November.

Young is currently in his second mayoralty term and earlier was a city aldermen.

Smith said he has represented a good portion of the riding at the local level for 10 years and so knows the area. He was first elected alderman in 1969 and again in 1971. He became mayor in November, 1973, and has served in that role since.

The issue in the May 11 election as far as Oak Bay is concerned will be "Where can you get your best representation?" Smith said.

Saboteurs Blast N-Factory

Times News Services

TOULON — A series of explosions touched off by a team of saboteurs wrecked or damaged nuclear reactors and other atomic equipment built for foreign countries including Iraq, French police said today.

The blasts caused damage estimated at millions of dollars in the nuclear department of the Mediterranean Naval and Industrial Co. plant at nearby Seyne-sur-Mer, police said.

The blasts were the most spectacular single attack on atomic equipment in France since unknown attackers tried to sabotage a nuclear power plant in eastern France four years ago.

The damaged equipment included two experimental nuclear reactors France had built for Iraq to allow the Arab country to familiarize itself with atomic energy.

Israel has sharply protested the French-Iraqi nuclear accord claiming the equipment might allow Iraq to acquire military nuclear capability.

Other heavily damaged equipment in the wrecked warehouse included a steel container for atomic piles also destined for Iraq, nuclear component equipment for Belgium and a huge steel cover for a storage tank for radioactive elements which was built for the West German power plant at Kalkar, police said.

None of the three guards posted around the huge warehouse during the night were injured in the explosions which, police investigators said, were the work of experts.

Authorities said there was no radioactive material anywhere in the plant which merely produces the mechanical parts of nuclear equipment.

An anonymous telephone call to the newspaper Le Monde in Paris claimed the explosions were carried out by a so-called "Group of French Ecologists" inspired by the Pennsylvania nuclear power plant accident.

In other repercussions from the Harrisburg disaster, West German Interior Minister Gerhard Baum said the Bonn government will reconsider its nuclear

By AB KENT
Times Staff

Peace between Egypt and Israel will make life tougher for UN troops in the Middle East, a senior Canadian officer predicts.

Victoria-born Lieut.-Col. Ronald Marrs, on leave from Damascus where he is in command of logistics for UN forces on the Golan Heights, said the Syrians and Israelis are at war — "no ifs and buts about it."

Only a separation by the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force and a quasi-armistice prevents fighting on the Golan boundary between Syria and Israel, he said.

"People tend to be mesmerized by the Camp David talks," Marrs said.

"They forget the longstanding enmity between Israel and other Arab states, including Syria. They are not in a political mood to do anything of a peacekeeping nature."

Marrs believes it will be a long time before the struggle is resolved, if ever, in the fertile western Golan and the barren east toward the road to Damascus.

The peace signed by Egypt and Israel will bind together all the anti-Israeli Arabs, creating more tension on Israeli borders and the Golan Heights will be the last to see an end to strife.

The two sides take different views of the UN force, which has consisted of large Austrian and Iranian contingents with smaller Canadian and Polish components.

Marrs said the Israelis see the UNDOF as weak and powerless to stop a military action.

"But that's not its role. It's only to stop minor incidents, to try to stop escalation."

Originally the UNDOF was to supervise the disengagement of combatants, but it has grown into a sedentary peacekeeping force occupying sovereign Syrian territory where no military presence is tolerated.

"In my nine months there it has been relatively quiet in a military sense," said Marrs, here to visit his wife Kathy, two children and his parents.

There is an occasional accidental overflight of the Golan by military aircraft of one side or the other, but no shooting since Marrs arrived.

A regular air support service is flown between Egypt, Syria and Cypress by two Canadian Buffalo transports known to the troops as "Sunshine Airlines."

They are painted white and carry UN markings but the pilots are careful to fly strict corridors since one plane was shot down in the early days of the force.

Canadians are generally well respected by both sides, Marrs said.

He said the Canadians play an important role for the UN in the Middle East because they are the only professional soldiers taking part.

Marrs and his staff are responsible for all transport and logistical support — food services, engineering, billets, garbage disposal, maintenance and whatever else is necessary to field troops from diverse nationalities.

There are frustrating waits for equipment or supplies because of international bidding requirements; the UN has a limited budget for peacekeeping and food is a big problem in itself because of traditional requirements and individual preferences.

Even latrines can be troublesome for troops not used to plumbing, he said.

But it is good experience for the Canadians to learn how other nations run their armies and tackle problems, and between them, they make the multinational force work.

In his work Marrs gets to know a lot of Syrian businessmen and liaison officers, and members of the Israeli liaison staff. He has been a guest at both social extremes — an Israeli wedding and an Arab party.

TOWN TALK

Veteran enumerator Elaine Larose believes they are.

She points out many enumerators may earn even less this time around than they did in the 1974 election.

Under the old system enumerators were paid a basic $50 plus $12 for attending a training session, $10 to cover incidental expenses and 25 cents for each name collected.

Under the new system enumerators get $15 for the training session, $15 for incidental expenses and 40 cents a name up to 200 names, 60 cents a name over 200. The basic $50 payment has been dropped.

Larose says enumerators will have to collect 230 names just to break even. At 250 names, the maximum number assigned to any enumerator, the gain is a meager $5.50 over the old rate.

That works out to just under a four-per cent hike. Taking inflation into account it represents a huge reduction, in the order to 36 to 46 per cent depending on what inflation figures you use, eight per cent or 10 per cent per annum.

The Greater Victoria Public Library is arranging three evenings of speeches for the three declared Victoria riding candidates in the federal election.

On April 11, Liberal candidate Robert Monaghan will speak. The week following it will be Conservative candidate Allan McKinnon's turn. And on April 25, NDP standard-bearer Gretchin Brewin will take the podium.

"Because we don't have the room," she replied. There are only 120 seats in the library's auditorium.

"Is that why you've asked for pre-registration for the series?" our sleuth inquired.

"Yes," she answered.

"How many registrations do you have so far?" he asked.

"Sixteen," she said.

Robin's guess was 18,750 seeds and Roy said 750 cones, winning for them a Coulter pine cone mounted on a stand, and a display of 18 native seeds.

The fledgling Vancouver Island Business Exchange is hitting the big time, sending two of its members to China to feel out trade prospects.

They plan to take in the international trade fair at Canton, hope to stop over briefly in Shanghai, and will spend a week in Peking.

While in Peking they have been invited to speak to the People's Technical Corporation about new techniques in house building, something about which Hoogland, a contractor with his own company, Frisia Construction, has more than a passing familiarity.

Storm Sinks Boat Escapade

Stormy weather in the Strait of Juan de Fuca resulted in the arrest of a Victoria man who took a 32-foot charter fishing boat from the Inner Harbor late Thursday night.

When the boat, identified as the Tuggy, started to roll in heavy seas halfway across the strait, the man radioed for help.

The U.S. Coast Guard heard his call and sent out a cutter which escorted him into harbor at Port Angeles where he was taken into custody.

Owner Marcel Fisher, 3050 Devon, said he is uncertain whether to press charges against the 28-year-old man, whom he describes as a former employee.

View Royal Fights Off Oil Tanks

By HUMPHRY DAVY
Times Staff

The View Royal Community Association today slammed the proposal to move oil tank farms from the Inner Harbor to Esquimalt harbor.

Chairman Brian Tetlow said in a brief to the board there is "not one single valid reason why this small community with an attractive harbor should be burdened with such a facility and all the hazards it entails."

The association wants the Capital Regional Board to ask the provincial government to study alternatives.

Apart from fire hazards to residential areas, Tetlow said the facilities would threaten with oil pollution a harbor rich in wildlife resource and two major parks, Fort Rodd Hill and a waterfowl reserve.

"We can only assume the committee of the regional board instructed to find another location for oil tanks has not adequately assessed the situation, or else it looks to View Royal as being the community least able to defend itself against objectionable industrial encroachmemt," he said.

Tetlow said it isn't logical to move the oil tanks to Esquimalt and ruin a harbor with still 75 per cent of its shoreline still in its natural state.

"You would be simply moving an undesirable facility from one already largely despoiled waterway to one which still has much of its original natural appeal — and to the detriment of the community which surrounds it," he said.

Only 25 per cent of the shoreline is industrial compared with more than 50 per cent of the shoreline of Victoria harbor, he said.

"Most of Victoria harbor shoreline has long been used for industrial puposes and only a very minor section of shoreline has retained any of its original quality," he said. "The residental component of the backshore is also relatively minor, constituting about 11 per cent.

"With most of the Victoria harbor shoreline exposed to prevailing westerlies, it is questionable if this can ever be desirable waterfront for permanent residence," he said.

Apart from a study on all the implications of a move and for alternatives, he said the CRB should ask the government to look into consolidating the six oil tank installations in Victoria harbor into one or two locations in the same harbor.

Tetlow said Victoria harbor can only be restored to its original state at tremendous cost to taxpayers.

This isn't necessary, he said, if modern landscape techniques are applied to most of the industrial installations there.

"The major problem is the untidiness and lack of plan for industry around Victoria harbor," he said. "Much could be done to enhance the harbor without the costly process of actually phasing out industry."

Couvelier Challenges Mika

Saanich Mayor Mel Couvelier Wednesday challenged Ald. John Mika to a public debate on whether the rights of individual neighborhoods are of paramount importance in municipal planning.

Couvelier said the issue is a vital one which directly affects the financial future of the municipality and taxpayers' continued ability to pay for essential services.

"It's a fact of life the voters of Saanich must come to realize — that if they continue to elect councillors who believe each neighborhood has the absolute right of veto over the future destiny of the municipality, Saanich will never be able to plan its own future."

The mayor's comments in an interview were responding to Mika's charge that Couvelier had reneged on an election campaign promise to oppose the proposed industrial park in the Royal Oak area.

Couvelier said so long as the attitude prevails that each neighborhood must be engaged in dialogue before any decision is made, Saanich will continue to drift along in an ad hoc, unco-ordinated way.

He said it's inevitable such a philosophy will lead ultimately to a financial crisis because unless Saanich takes action now to broaden its tax base it will be impossible to maintain the municipality's present level of service to taxpayers.

"I am primarily concerned with the tax base of the municipality," he said, in justifying his decision Wednesday to provide a 5-4 majority on council in favor of reconsidering the Royal Oak proposal.

He pointed out that Saanich derives more than three-quarters of its assessment income from single-family residential taxes, while in the city of Victoria with a much heavier commercial-industrial base the proportion is only about one-third.

"Any economist will tell you that if a municipality is to balance its books and provide a reasonable level of service it has to have close to a 50-50 split (between residential and other taxation sources)," he added.

Couvelier flatly rejected Mika's charge that he had betrayed voters by switching his vote on the Royal Oak industrial park issue.

CUPE Seeks Conciliation

The Joint Negotiating Committee, representing five locals of the Canadian Union of Public Employees, wants a conciliation board set up to assist both parties in their current contract dispute.

The board proposal is now being put to the memberships of the individual locals.

Members of Local 50, representing city outside workers, voted unanimously in favor of the move Thursday night. Other locals will vote during the weekend and next week.

"The members felt that there were inadequate negotiations going on," Local 50 president Jim Walker said today. "We want the employers and the unions to sit down to serious negotiations."

The use of a conciliation board is an unusual move in such disputes and one not provided for in the Labor Code.

However, Walker said the parties are so far apart that the JNC feels only such a board can take the two positions, study them, and come back with non-binding recommendations.

"It is an unusual move but one that we think will bring the bargaining positions a little closer together," he said.

The Greater Victoria Labor Relations Association has offered the more than 1,800 municipal employees represented by the JNC a 14.5-per-cent increase in a two-year contract.

The employees are asking for 17 per cent in one year.

Officers Honored

Two Saanich policemen have been awarded the Star of Courage for exceptional bravery in rescuing a 70-year-old woman from a fire in her home last April.

Sgt. Denis Lush and Acting Cpl. John Archer, responding to a report of a fire at 786 Middleton at noon April 9, knocked down the front door and crawled through dense smoke until they found the body of Marguerite Brindley.

Lush, choking from smoke inhalation, had to retreat and collapsed on the front lawn, but Archer managed to drag the woman outside before he collapsed.

Firemen administered oxygen to the men but nothing could be done for Mrs. Brindley.

Early Closing Blamed On Hookers, Drunks

Complaints about hookers and drunks brought about the early closing hours for two downtown Victoria liquor stores, the Liquor Distribution Branch said today.

A number of complaints had been received from citizens and merchants near Nootka Court and the Yates Street liquor stores, LDB communications manager Joyce Courtney said.

The stores now close at 9 p.m., instead of 11 p.m. All stores open at 10 a.m.

"There were only a few customers at the two stores at 9 p.m. but all sorts of undesirables gathered there," she said.

"The customers were being bothered by prostitutes and by people in an advanced state of intoxication."

The early closing was in response to complaints but the LDB is willing to take a second look if there are countering complaints that the closure will hurt the tourist industry, she said.

"Quite frankly we haven't had a single complaint so far about the early closing hours," chamber manager Brian Small said.

At the same time, Small confirmed there had been a number of complaints about the drunks and prostitutes, who were bothering people on their way to the stores or heading for restaurants in the area.

"Perhaps if there had been a more visible display by the police this situation might not have developed," Small said.

He hopes the police will patrol near the two stores before 9 p.m..

If the police make a few patrols and clean up the area, it might be possible to return to the 11 p.m. closing hours, he said.

Two LDB stores in the district will continue to be open until 11 p.m, They are at 1087 McKenzie and 2955 Tillicum. LDB stores in shopping centres tend to close at 6 p.m.

Thumb Print of Accused Found on Boat - RCMP

Sgt. Allan de St. Remy, skipper of the RCMP vessel Dufferin, said he took up a position at Rhodes Island in Cypress Bay July 14. The next morning, his vessel and three other RCMP craft moved west at 6:50 a.m. and at 7:18 a.m. an object appeared on the radar and suddenly the Weatherly appeared 30 yards in front in dense fog.

He gave chase and in a few minutes secured his vessel alongside the Weatherly.

He said there was no trouble from the people found on the Weatherly, they were very co-operative and two or three of them were jovial.

He said he had seen the Weatherly before and it wasn't outfitted for commercial fishing although it was capable of being used for sports fishing.

It was 11½ miles from Shelter Inlet to where the Weatherly was stopped, he said.

Cpl. Joseph Macdonald, an RCMP dogmaster, said he was aboard the RCMP vessel Duncan when the Weatherly was stopped.

He said he saw a large plastic garbage bag thrown from the Weatherly which he retrieved from the water, along with two small clear plastic bags.

He gave all three to Sgt. David Rossander, in charge of the identification section of Port Alberni RCMP, who testified they contained green vegetation like soil.

He turned them over to Constable Gary Appleton of the RCMP drug squad who said they contained a green, leafy substance which he turned over to the crime laboratory in Vancouver.

Capt. Gerry Zanussi, navigator of a Canadian Armed Forces Argus aircraft, said his craft took over surveillance of a vessel from the U.S. Coast Guard at 1:35 p.m. July 14.

A member of the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration, Michael Garland, said he was involved in tracking the Toernyn up the American coast until surveillance was turned over to Canadians.

Zanussi said his aircraft tracked the vessel by radar and by sight from the time it crossed into Canadian waters until it went into Sydney Inlet. At 11:30 p.m. July 14, he said the vessel had stopped in Sydney Inlet and his observation ceased and another aircraft came out to relieve him.

Judge Peter Millward adjourned the trial until Monday morning after telling the jury it was his intention to run the trial four days a week, rather than the full five, while the pace remained on schedule.

The right thumb print of one of five men accused of conspiracy to import marijuana was found on a cupboard aboard the vessel Weatherly, a county court jury was told Thursday.

The print belonged to Garth Clarence Vincent Joseph Sexton, 28, testified Cpl. Jack Payne of the RCMP, who lifted the impression, and Sgt. Carl Chizeck of the RCMP, who took Sexton's prints at Victoria police station.

Crown counsel Gordon Macdonald told the jury in his opening remarks that the prosecution would attempt to show that the Mexican vessel Toernyn, loaded with 13.5 tons of Colombian marijuana, rendezvoused with the vessels Weatherly and Sunfish in Shelter Inlet and the contraband was loaded on to the two vessels.

He added that the prosecution would say that the Weatherly was apprehended by the RCMP and 11 persons aboard arrested. Four more were arrested on shore and 439 bales of marijuana weighing 13.5 tons were found, he said.

Sexton and Ronald Cecil Spurrell, 31, of Surrey; Frederick Charles Scott, 28, of Vancouver; John Mobley Doss, 25, of Dillon, Colorado, formerly of Newfoundland; and Frank Piersanti, 28, of Montreal are accused of:

— Conspiracy to import marijuana with 14 named persons and persons unknown between April 1 and July 16, 1978.

— Importing marijuana between the same dates.

— Possession of marijuana July 15 for the purpose of trafficking.

Payne, a fingerprint expert, said he took photographs July 15 and 16 of a small campsite at the mouth of the Megin River which included zodiac boats behind two tents and, across Shelter Inlet on Obstruction Island, he photographed two outboard motors and a large number of bales covered with topsack 75 to 100 feet from the beach, in the bush.

He searched the Weatherly for fingerprints July 16 at Tofino and identified one as belonging to Sexton.

Chizeck said he fingerprinted a number of persons July 16 at Victoria police station, including Sexton, and he identified Sexton in court. He also fingerprinted Edwin Floyd Terry and Payne identified a print from the Weatherly as belonging to him.

Deer Hunter, Heaven Can Wait Lead Movies List

Coming Home, another drama dealing with the Vietnam experience, was nominated in eight categories, including nominations in the four acting categories for the film's stars, Jane Fonda, Jon Voight, Penelope Milford and Bruce Dern. Other top nominated films were Midnight Express with six, Woody Allen's Interiors with five and Days of Heaven, Same Time, Next Year and The Wiz with four each.

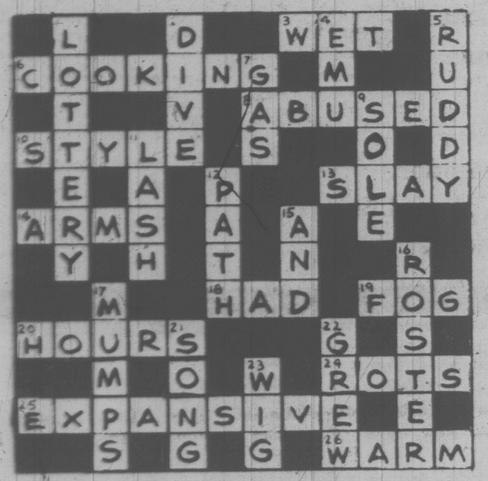
—PAYOFF PUZZLE—

Correct Answers to Last Week's Puzzle



CLUES ACROSS

3. WET not set. For an organized outdoor event (motor race) there can hardly fail to be certain conditions set, and there "may, of course," be WET conditions.
6. COOKING not looking. She wants them to COOK with, not to look at. In any case, it should be a question of thorougly good — rather than good looking things.
8. ABUSED not amused. The latter part of the clue has some air of seeking to explain uncalled-for behavior; in this respect, ABUSED is more apt than amused.
10. STYLE not stole. Fashion is broadly a matter of STYLE and there seems no particular reason to single out a stole.
13. SLAY not play. Professional players are much too well known and common for there to be any point in the clue's assurance that such people really do exist. "There are, of course," professional SLAYers.
14. ARMS not arts. It is in ARMS, rather, that advanced societies are all that much more sophisticated. In the arts, there is a considerable element of primitivism anyway.
18. HAD not hid. It would be the case that the girl's talent lay unseen, rather than that she actually hid it.
19. FOG not bog or dog. Thick FOG could well deter him in an uncompromising sense. A bog is the sort of area he can cope with, or avoid. Similarly, an ordinary dog hardly imposes on him an abnormal and serious deterrent.
20. HOURS not tours. "HOURS" links up better with the clue's hint that "regular ones" are an understood thing in general favor (though they don't suit everyone).
25. EXPANSIVE not expensive. "Scale" is primarily a matter of size (eg., EXPANSIVE). Also, since expensive is close akin in meaning to "extravagant," the clue's phrase "sometimes apt to seem extravagant" tends to be an understatement for expensive.
26. WARM not wary. Since it is a pity that a speech should be extremely wary in its terms in the first place, the clue's talk of lack of spontaneity has more point for WARM.

CLUES DOWN

1. LOTTERY not pottery. The clue applies more naturally to that which a man (in a general sense) might have occasion to want to try to organize — but, in many cases, would be "a bit hazy" as to how to tackle it. The idea of running a pottery would simply be beyond a man, or not arise.
5. RUDDY not muddy. "Tint" is a question of coloration (RUDDY). In any case, muddy waters are far too common for the consideration of "causes," in "certain" cases, to be apt.
12. PATH not bath. In the case of a trodden PATH across a meadow, say, the absence of grass can betoken frequent use. In a bath, one may doubt if there are signs of "frequent use" (as distinct from, say, recent use, or neglect).
15. AND not add. 2+2=4 means that two AND two are four. "Plus" means "with the addition of," not just "add."
16. ROSTER not poster. The suggestion that the names may be spelt wrong, favors ROSTER, since a poster is normally a professional job. There is less call to consider a poster as something with names on, anyway (which, in essence, is what a ROSTER is).
17. MUMPS not jumps. Having the jumps is merely a touch condition, such as can be regarded as a bad mood — not really an excuse for a bad mood. MUMPS is more reasonable.

Beradino's Baseball Fever

By JOHN GOUDAS

It isn't a rash or an allergy, but what General Hospital's John Beradino (he's Dr. Steve Hardy) has this time of year is baseballitis . . . a malady which strikes such stars as Frank Sinatra, Don Rickles, Jonathan Winters, and Johnny Carson.

Beradino, who has played Dr. Hardy for the last 16 years, is a former outfielder with the St. Louis Browns, and was a World Series winner with the Cleveland Indians in 1948.

With the baseball season just underway, Beradino is feeling the old itch. So while the stars in Hollywood hang around Los Angeles Dodger manager, Tom Lasorda, Beradino and his two sons are out on the field mingling with the players.

It turns out, though, that John did begin at age 7 as an actor, doing extra bits for the old Our Gang comedies.

"That's what got my mother started on the idea that perhaps I could become another Jackie Coogan," said Beradino. "So my parents invested $10,000 in a movie that some Italian producer had gotten them interested in, but the picture was never finished. They lost the money, and that was the end of my movie career as a kid, in 1927."

Beradino's father wanted him to become a professional baseball player like some of the popular Italians of that time. Luckily, for General Hospital fans, he managed to make the most of both careers.

In John's mind, Dr. Hardy is part of the hub on General Hospital — the rest of the nucleus being composed of Audrey Hardy, Jessie Brewer, Lee Baldwin and Dr. Taylor. When that hub is being neglected for the spokes — storylines of the baddies — the show falls apart.

This past year found new producer Gloria Monty greasing the hub again, and providing new spokes, new stories, and new characters.

"I think we're a family now," says Beradino. "And our good ratings tell us so."

John Beradino

Sherry Mathis

Concerning pro stars breaking into the entertainment business, Beradino recalls a different world back in the early '50s.

"In my day, athletes were frowned upon by the acting profession," said Beradino. "Maybe once in a while a movie was made about Babe Ruth or Lou Gehrig, and that was it."

As for performers, Beradino is about the first former professinal athlete to make it big.

"Okay, if you want to use the word "big" as an actor," said Beradino, "but I starved a lot. I had a tough time getting started, and my baseball career was more of a hindrance than any kind of help."

So if you want to find John Beradino off camera this spring, the best place to look is Dodger Stadium.

CHANNEL CHATTER. Real Love is in the air on Search for Tomorrow. Sherry Mathis, who plays Liza Kaslow, and Jerry Lanning, who is currently seen as Nick D'Antoni, have announced their plans to wed in June or July. They were introduced by Rock Hudson, who co-starred with Sherry in Camelot. Incidentally, Jerry's Nick is the guy who seems to pose a threat to Liza and Travis' relationship.

It was like old home week when Julie Montgomery returned to her role of Samantha Vernon on One Life to Live recently. Julie had left the show last October to devote full time to her college studies which she has since completed. Welcome back, Julie.

If Cliff's face looks familiar to viewers of Guiding Light, it's because actor Richard Council was last seen as Michael Blake in Love of Life. Fans will recall that Blake was killed off in Love of Life.

Megan Bagot (Laine Adamson in Search for Tomorrow) is currently in rehearsal for an off-Broadway production of the British play Vampire, scheduled to open in late April.

Veteran character actor Louis Edmonds has been cast as Langley Wallingford in All My Children. Langley is a con man who is about to skin one of the prominent citizens of Pine Valley.

Distinguished stage actor Philip Bosco will be prominently featured in the storyline concerning the Holly-Roger rape case on Guiding Light. Bosco plays D.A. Clarence Bailey and he'll add an air of judicious authority to the proceedings.

PLOT PORTENTS. Amanda is certain she's lost Greg to his career on Days of Our Lives, and she's at loose ends. Thanks to Mickey's generosity, Mike and Margo will have that house, and Mike will take a night job at the garage. Crafty Stephanie knows that Bob Anderson can be easily manipulated and appears to have outwitted everybody over security checks at Anderson Manufacturing. And that test blowup between Chris and Mary may be for keeps.

Spring has sprung on The Young and the Restless. And the ever optimistic Lorie believes that a man could turn venomous Vanessa into a human being. While, finally, there's hope for good old Liz. Stuart is coming around, realizing he made a mistake with Jill. Even Derek seems content with Kay, and may have to save her from crafty Suzanne. Also Casey's bitterness towards her father Nick appears to have softened.

Maeve is concerned over Patrick's new romantic involvement on Ryan's Hope. Johnny's commodity speculation fluctuates and little John inadvertently helps Rae's romantic plans. Mary and Siobhan continue to argue, putting Jack in the middle.

The controversy surrounding Paul Garrett's apparent parentage continues. For those of you who haven't been following the scenario, this is in reference to Centennial, which was recently produced on NBC. The question remains: was Garret related to Pasquinel, and if so, how? Following is a typical response received, and another which may finally clear up the issue.

NAY SAYERS — Paul Garret (David Janssen) was not a direct descendant of Pasquinel (Robert Conrad). Garett's family came into the picture later, and they were good friends of Lucinda and Levi, (Pasquinel's daughter and son-in-law). I hope this answers your question. — Barbara McCuin, Middletown Springs, Vt.

YEA SAYERS — Page 832 in the book Centennial shows a geneology chart and give the following information: Paul Garret's mother is the daughter of Paul Mercy and Nancy Lloyd. Paul Mercy is the son of Pasquinel Mercy and Laura Skimmerhorn. Pasquinell Mercy is the son of Maxwell Mercy and Lisette Pasquinel who was Pasquinel's (the original) St. Louis daughter. — Bob Boyle, Sussex, N.J.

Obviously, the TV version skipped several generations and explanations along the way that were perfectly clear in the Michener novel. The conclusion seems to be that TV viewers should spend more time reading.

CLONED — I have written before but received no answer. Let me try again. Are they planning to bring back the movie Clone Master, and who was the star of that show? — C.P., Gulfport, Miss.

Art Hindle was the star of that NBC made-for-TV movie. It is not on any current network schedule, and nothing new is planned for the project. I'm afraid that often when it comes to this column the promise "ask and ye shall receive" does not always work. There are just too many letters.

AMAZING GRACE — Some time ago on "Little House on the Prairie" Laura and her father found a baby girl in the mountains. Laura named her Grace. They found the parents who took her back with them. Now the Ingalls family has an older baby named Grace. Where did they get her? — Mrs. E. Lehmann, Los Angeles, Calif.

They got her in a much more typical fashion than finding her in the woods. Mrs. Ingalls gave birth to Grace at the end of last season.

WEST WIND — Will you settle an argument between myself and my husband? Will you please let it be known that Mae West did not have the leading part nor any part in the movie "Gone With the Wind." — Mrs. John C. Hammonder, Lake Placid, Fla.

Sure. Let it be known now and forever more that Mae West did not have the leading part nor any part in the film "Gone With the Wind."

NAME THAT NAME — Can you tell me why Paul Michael Glaser uses two first names? Wouldn't one or the other be easier and less pretentious sounding? — Karen Vogel, Butte, Mont.

One or the other would definitely be easier, but it is not pretention that causes Glaser to double up on the first names. He started in the theatre as Paul Glaser, but when rejoined the Screen Actors Guild, there was already an actor by that name. Thus he added the middle name.

MICHAEL LEARNED — I understand Michael Learned is bowing out as Olivia in "The Waltons" when the current season ends. Does this mean the end of the series? — G. F. Victoria, B.C.

Michael Learned decided not to renew her contract for the award-winning weekly series and will depart for what she says is a long, well deserved rest. Executive Producer Earl Hammer said no decision has been made on whether the series will continue next season. If a decision is made to proceed with an eighth season, Hamner indicated the dramatic series will most likely shift away from its focus on various members, of the Walton family to the life and events of the many inhabitants in and around Walton's Mountain.

BOY OH BRUCE — Can you tell me where to write Bruce Boxleitner of "How the West Was Won?" I love the show, only I wish it would go back to the serialized format of last year. — Trish Dooble, Medina, N.D.

Several viewers have written with the same complaint, but the producers are sticking to their guns on the new format, at least for this season. You can write them and Boxleitner in care of the show, MGM, Culver City, CA. 90203.

Questions of general interest should be sent to: DIALOGUE, Pepper O'Brien, NEA, 220 Park Ave., New York N.Y., U.S.A., 10017.

Looking At Stars

Robert MacNeil says nobody ever told me why he was chosen as the narrator of Mobil's "fourth network" presentation of "Edward the King".

Somebody told us, though. There had been a long list of candidates, who never even knew their names were floating around. Among them was David Langton the elegant Richard Bellamy of "Upstairs, Downstairs", also set in the Edwardian Era. "And, of course, he would have been suitable," said our informant who added that MacNeil is even more so because he is a reporter by profession.

Robert Conrad Stars in Duke

Violence Creeping Back

By JOAN HANAUER

NEW YORK (UPI) — Violence may be creeping back into network television on little flat feet.

The cat bringing it back is Robert Conrad, who stars as Duke Ramsey in NBC's new private eye, limited—run series, Duke, which openened with a two-hour special April 5.In the four weeks ahead, the series will be broadcast Fridays, 10-11 p.m.

Conrad plays a 40-year-old middleweight fighter who gets beaten in his final match by the slowness of age as much as the rights and lefts of his youthful opponent.

He retires from the ring broke, and gets his start in the private eye field when he investigates the murder of his beloved manager. Duke gets help from a rich girl admirer and a drawling detective sergeant with whom our hero has the mucho macho love-hate relation ship that is part of the private eye formula.

Violence crops up at the show's opening, as Duke's last fight is displayed with lots of blows, but without the blood that makes real prizefights so appalling or appealing, depending on your viewpoint.

Punches and bullets punctuate the program and at one point Conrad dangles a hood named Crazy Tommy T. off a high bridge.

If the show gets good ratings, there are only two possible reasons — Conrad's attractive characterization or the attraction of violences in a sea of sitcoms. The script wouldn't attract anyone with the brain of a lima bean, which is too bad because Conrad deserves a crack at better material.

The emirate of Dubai is on the economic warpath against Zionism. One target of the emirate's Boycott of Israel Office, according to the semiofficial Emirate News, is ABC's "The Love Boat."

The three contenders in the Nielsen ratings race have kept their relative positions for the week ending April 1, with ABC on top, CBS in second place and ABC in the cellar — in fact, the last eight entries in the 64-item Nielsen list all are NBC shows.

The big success of the week was the premiere of ABC's "The Mackenzies of Paradise Cove," which finished second in the plush opening spot following "Happy Days" that usually is reserved for "Laverne £ Shirley." Other new ABC shows to fare well were "The Ropers," "Angie" and "13 Queens Blvd."

High-rated new CBS shows included "Dukes of Hazzard," "Stockard Channing in Just Friends," "Dear Detective," "Bad News Bears" and "White Shadow" in its new time period. Part 1 of "The Chisholms" also drew well.

NBC's good news was confined to NCAA basketball, "Diff'rent Strokes" and "Jesus of Nazareth," Part 1.

The 10 top network television shows for the week ending April 1, according to the A.C. Nielsen Co., were:

1: Mork £ Mindy; 2: The Mackenzies of Paradise Cove; 3: Happy Days; 4: Three's Company; 5: 60 Minutes; 6: Eight is Enough; 7: Charlie's Angels; 8: The Ropers; 9: M-A-S-H; 10: Angie.

Looking At Stars

Maybe it was never more than a rumor that the rash of one-shot revivals of old series might even get those formerly married, Lucille Ball and Desi Arnaz together on screen again ... along with their now-grown offspring, Desi Jr. and Lucie Arnaz. But even if a few grains of true hope ever existed, forget it for now. Because little Lucie has struck luck in what promises to be a long, long Broadway run in Neil Simon's new show (with music by Marvin Hamlish), "They're Playing Our Song".

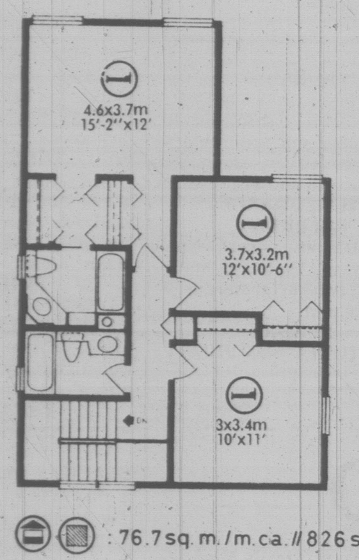
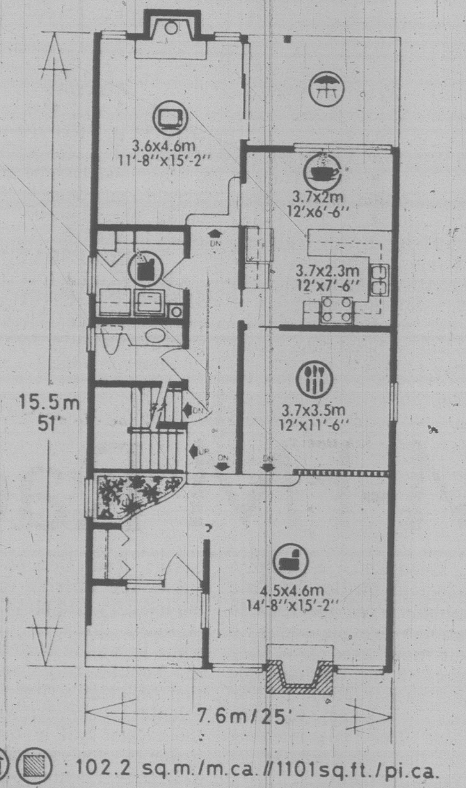
Home of the Week





PLAN No. 77-1927

Modern Home for Narrow Lot

This striking 3-bedroom, one and a half storey home is specifically designed for the narrow urban lot and incorporates many outstanding architectural features desired by today's homeowners. Only 25 feet in width, the home is faced with horizontal siding with diagonally-placed siding on the accent walls. Its sloped cedar shake roof and brick chimney add eye appeal to the contemporary facade.

Windows in the entrance foyer capture sunlight from exposure on two sides to encourage plant growth in the built-in corner planter situated next to the foyer guest closet. The foyer leads gracefully into the sunken living room and both have dramatic vaulted ceilings. The masonry fireplace in the living room is flanked by large picture windows overlooking the front garden and creating a visually exciting feature wall.

The main level is up two risers from the sunken entry-living room. The formal dining room, overlooking the living room through the spindle divider, is separated from the serving area in the kitchen via convenient pocket door. A well-planned U-shape kitchen, abundant with storage and counter space for food preparation, is adjacent to the cosy breakfast nook which overlooks the rear patio and opens into the sunken family room two risers down. An energy-efficient, zero-clearance fireplace unit in the family room rings warmth to informal entertaining and family gatherings, which can easily be moved outdoors to the patio in fine weather via sliding glass doors. A canopy over the patio offers protection in poor weather and steps lead down to the grade level and garden at the rear.

John Hearn's Collectibles

What, precisel, is an etching, asks George Prescott of Victoria and how would you recognize one?

Etching is a technique based on the fact that acid will eat into metal but not into a protective coating of wax. In times gone by, weapons and armour were decorated in this way. The piece would be covered in wax, a design scratched through the coating and the whole thing dipped briefly in an acid bath. When it was removed, there would be the design neatly etched in the metal.

Exactly the same thing can be done with a metal printing plate. It must be perfectly flat and usually of polished copper. The plate is covered with a thin layer of black wax through which the picture is drawn with a fine needle. the plate is then varnished and dipped in acid. When the lightest parts of the picture are sufficiently etched the plate is taken out and wax re-applied to those light areas. The plate is then dipped again to deepen the darker lines. Obviously by varying the etching time a great deal of subtlety is possible.

To make the print the plate is inked all over then wiped clean leaving ink only in the etched lines.

With a little study it is not too difficult to differentiate between an etching and some other kind of print such as an engraving in which the line is cut directly into the plate with a special tool. An etched line is hazier along the edges and the finished print will be noticeably soft in texture. Any library will have some books on prints with illustrations which make the differences quite easy to recognize.

R. B. Archer of London, Ont., asks for tips on the care and cleaning of good furniture.

One authority likens wood to human skin — it must not get too dry, it must be allowed to breathe, it must be fed with nutrients — all of which sounds like a commercial for Oil of Olay. The point is well taken. The enemies of fine natural patina are excesses of sunshine, moisture, dryness and dust.

Dust is potentially less harmful than the methods you use to remove it. When you are cleaning pots and pans you may well sprinkle a layer of some abrasive onto the utensil before you scrub it. A layer of dust on a table top is also an abrasive and lack of care in taking it off can do about the same amount of damage. You need a piece of very clean, very soft, natural material such as cotton. Not so easy to find in these days of polyesters but using a coarse dirty material is comparable with using Brillo — slower to be sure but in the long run just as devastating.

Apply furniture cream, or beeswax mixed with natural turpentine if you are a purist, with gentle strokes across the grain; then progressively change to even gentle strokes.. Leave for an hour before final polishing.

Don't forget the undersides of flat surfaces and the insides of drawers. They too need the occasional coat of cream or wax. There is a technial term for wood which is kept dry one side and moist on the other — warped!

Raw Memoirs of a Life Behind Bars

The Governor-General's Award for non-fiction in 1978 has gone to the darkest horse in the race. The winning book is Go-Boy, by Roger Caron, subtitled "Memoirs of a Life Behind Bars."

The award came as a surprise partly because Caron's book, though it has gone into a second printing and has sold over 4,000 copies in hardcover, was not well known. There was no promotional tour at publication time last spring, for example, because the author was still on conditional parole from Collin's Bay penitentiary and had to settle for a three-day pass to promote his book in Toronto.

Matters were doubtless not helped by McGraw-Hill Ryerson who, while having the good sense to publish the book (after it had been vetoed by Anna Porter at McClelland and Stewart and rejected after a year by Macmillan, because Caron "was not a name the public would recognize"), could not even get its title straight.

Caron's acknowledgements refer to his book as Go-Boy. The title page lists it as "Go-Boy!". The dust-jacket, on the other hand, says simply, "Go Boy". Caron's choice must be the right one, for oddly enough, considering the man's history, he strikes the reader as an authority one can trust.

Roger Caron is 41. He has spent his life almost continuously behind bars since the age of 16. His actual crimes ranged from break and entry to armed robbery, but his major offences took place in prison. He was a brawler who was once sentenced to two years in solitary confinement. He also managed a total of six escapes, all described in hair-raising detail in the book. (After two weeks of furious activity in an Ottawa jail, he was transferred when the superintendent had a nervous breakdown.)

He was confined in prisons from Manitoba to New Brunswick, as succeeding wardens refused to house him. He survived two series of electric shock treatments and five months in a maximum security asylum for the criminally insane, where he was sent after refusing to expose a fellow-prisoner who had attacked him. These experiences, which he relates in brief but graphic detail, make One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest look like a tea party.

Even rougher is Caron's description of the Paddle, an infamous method of corporal punishment which was inflicted on him at 17 for destroying a guard's flashlight: "Like a pistol shot, (the strap) made solid contact with my buttocks, my head snapped backwards, while violently driving my shackled body forward. White searing pain exploded throughout my being and blood gushed from my lips as I struggled to stifle a scream . . ."

Go-Boy is far from unrelieved horror, however. Caron's descriptions of his childhood, of his difficulties in losing his virginity (finally the woman, in desperation, seduced him), of his various robbery attempts, are all equally gripping. So is his mental and emotional odyssey towards rehabilitation. And so, especially, are his descriptions of his fellow prisoners. Here's one example: "Coco's one goal and passion in life was to date Elizabeth Taylor. He was serving six months for breaking into a theatre and damaging a movie projector in a wild effort to run an Elizabeth Taylor film for his own private midnight viewing. Once inside, he got banished from the general population for throwing ink on the man who was reformatory censor because he wouldn't let his letters through to Elizabeth Taylor. Coco, in his early forties, had no ears; his father had cut them off when he was 11 years old."

Go-Boy has gaps: Caron's memoirs proper end in 1963, with only brief notes to account for the period between then and 1972. (The original ms. ran to 1,600 pages. A second book will deal with the Kingston riot of 1971 and a novel is on the way.) They began as a "mass of notes' in a scribbler, written in solitary confinement.

"Jotting down my mercurial inner thoughts on paper was totally alien because I hated writing and could barely spell dog and cat," Caron tells us. "But within me was a compelling force that drove me to scribble and scribble on scraps of paper like a drowning man hanging on to a buoy."

The result is Go-Boy. It's a stunning indictment of our penal system that is amazingly devoid of self-pity. Caron wrote it to save his sanity and as a means of "going straight." In a way, he's a genuine hero. Read his story and see.

Tales That Sparkle

Ruth Manning-Sanders has been an inveterate teller of tales over the years in more than a dozen collections, A Book of Wizards (or Dwarfs or Giants etc.). Now comes a collection simply called Folk and Fairy Tales (Methuen, $9.95) in which some storis from the earlier books have been newly assembled, illustrations and all, together with five new ones. Yet even though it contains nothing much new, the collection sparkles as the well-told tale always will, with graceful variations on the old patterns, even a lighthearted moral: "But 'never', Jon, is a long word. And if by chopping off the letter with which that word begins, we do not make it any shorter, we do at least make it more hopeful."

It is especially interesting to see the Indian and Eskimo tales (both new), "Smoke Bones" and "Caribou Wife," taking their place so easily among the others without elaborately detailed settings or any polishing except that given by Manning-Sanders' lively style. In "Smoke Bones," benevolently dispensing aid and advice to the hero is a gentle skeleton who enjoys a good pipe of tobacco before he can rid his head of the mice and think clearly.

Robin Jacques is at his best in the illustrations. His interpretation is absolutely orthodox — witches in pointed hats, heroes in medieval dress — but he draws with such skill and delicacy that these are never merely stereotypes (I suspect they are the kind of pictures children like best). Racial differences blend into one another so that all figures look faintly Anglo-Saxon, which is a pity; but the static innocence and beauty of the figures are very appealing and they are so solid — even the least earthbound fairy — that their reality provides an ironic comment on the fantasy.

Questions and Answers

Geoffrey Hoyle and Janice Robertson's Ask Me Why (Clarke Irwin, $6.95) is an offshoot of the popular Ontario television series "Don't Ask Me." The simple question-and-answer format is exactly right, for the questions, framed briefly, are well selected and immediately arouse the reader's curiosity. Apart from answering questions you might be able to think up for yourself like, Do carrots help you see in the dark? or What is a mirage?, it also answers some that only a very alert observer would think to ask, such as, Does bathwater always drain out of the tub in the same direction?

It is a well-tried way of stimulating interest in science, and depending on the calibre of the questions, there's hardly anything better. The answer to such a question as, Why does glue stick? takes you in seven-league strides through a paragraph to contemplate some fundamental questions about the workings of the universe. At any rate it cannot fail to stop you walking fast and looking straight ahead and encourage you to stop, look all around and think.

Douglas and McIntyre have now added another two titles to their series "How They Lived in Canada" ($6.95 each) which presents the history and culture of the native peoples. The books are generally unexceptionable non-fiction fare: useful information straightforwardly presented and generously illustrated, although without any brilliantly imaginative touches.

Riel's People, How the Metis Lived, by Maria Campbell, who contributed an earlier title to the series People of the Buffalo, is the least successful I have seen, not because of her text, but because of the design and illustration. The typeface of the capitals is ornate, ugly and inappropriate, a kind of sub-Gothic script, and the black and white illustrations by David MacLagan are very dark and muddy, not approaching the quality of the color illustrations he earlier produced for another of Campbell's books Little Badger and the Fire Spirit.

Robin and Jill Ridington's People of the Trail: How the Northern Forest Indians Live, has been illustrated by Ian Bateson, and with a plainer typeface for capitals is considerably more successful and maintains the standard of the earlier titles.

My general doubts about the series is simply this: they are worthy but dull. I cannot imagine a child wanting to read them except for a school project; nothing much in them tempts the reader to devour them from cover to cover. The difficulty is not with the material, which is fascinating (Campbell mentions for instance that the Metis stored their bone needles in a hollowed-out bone plugged at both ends). It is simply that they lack a sense of excitement which all the best books communicate. These are merely facts we ought to know; and feeling my responsibility I say dutifully that we ought to read them, feeling that desire is unlikely to enter into it.

Frances Kennet and Tony Measham in A Child's Guide to Looking at Paintings (Musson, $6.95) have provided a well-designed and attractive book which fulfils its function admirably. Using pictures from a variety of cultures and periods, the authors pose direct and simple questions, asking of a Persian painting, "Aren't the colors beautiful?"; asking the reader to imagine how hot the hottest summer day can be when looking at Seurat's "The Bathers", or to look for the patterns in Crivelli's "Annunciation." All kinds of little gobbets of information enliven the bright pages, in addition to suggestions for projects and intriguing little quizzes. There's a sturdy simplicity about the approach which is not trivial or condescending.

Promising Partnership

A SALMON FOR SIMON, by Betty Waterton and Ann Blades. Douglas and McIntyre. $6.95.

Except in Mary of Mile 18 — and even that had really very little in the way of plot — Ann Blades has not shown herself a great story-teller, so it is good to see her collaborating with a writer. And despite a rather awkward title, the central episode of Betty Waterton's story is ideal for a picture book: an eagle mobbed by gulls drops the salmon it has caught into the water-filled hole Simon has dug in the sand. Simon, up to now anxious to catch a salmon, changes his mind and releases it. It is a simple yet dynamic situation and Waterton is on the edge of producing something very good indeed.

However, the book is not an unqualified success. One problem is the self-conscious locating of the story in B.C., which means that the story pauses for information — to tell us that sukai is the Indian word for salmon, or to explain the salmon's life-cycle. Such information (the kind adults have always felt bound to communicate to children) is not fully absorbed in the plot, which as a result tends to sag under the weight of too many words. All the same, the words are carefully chosen and although the story sags it does not collapse.

Blades' watercolors are, as always, delicate and charming, though variable in quality: the perspective of the picture in which the eagle drops the salmon is all wrong; on the other hand, the following two pictures of Simon staring at his unexpected catch are most appealing, from the soft blues and golds of the water and sand to the red edge on Simon's rubber boots and the solid dimensions of the fish.

In all, a promising partnership.

THE MYSTERIOUS TADPOLE, by Steven Kellogg. Beaverbooks. $8.75.

Kellogg quite literally pushes the art of the picture-book a little further in The Mysterious Tadpole by refusing to observe the usual limits where the details of publication are given, and the story continues on to the back cover. It is a technique that gives a welcome sense of fullness: there is so much to show that the ideas spill over.

Kellogg makes a good job of his dual role as artist/writer, using his words economically to counterpoint and emphasize the humor of the pictures: Alphonse, the tadpole who turns out to be a Loch Ness monster, is prehistorically green and wrinkled but also pink-spotted. Mrs. Shelbert, who has encouraged Louis to show his tadpole, "asked Louis to stop bringing him to school" beneath a delightful picture of classroom chaos as the children climb all over Alphonse, whose amiability is in proportion to his size.

BASIL AND BORIS IN NORTH AMERICA, by Ron and Atie van der Meer. Methuen. $7.25.

Generally speaking, I don't believe in wasting words on a bad book; after all, if a book is flagrantly bad it hardly needs comment. But there are some worse: the bad ones that look harmless. A group called "Friends of the Earth" is behind a series called About Basil and Boris, two penguins, and their Eskimo friend, Inook, who visit the places mentioned in the title (e.g. Basil and Boris in London) for the purpose of persuading everyone to stop killing whales and seals. They see all the most obvious sights and do nothing remotely interesting in brightly colored, obsessively neat pictures. So far nothing remarkably bad. But towards the end of their visit to North America, having been through the usual tourist attractions, one to a page, of the Mounties, the UN, Cape Canaveral (Canada and the U.S. are not differentiated), they go "further south" (this is after Florida), and are caught by some Indians, wearing warpaint "because it is a special day," with whom they smoke a pipe of peace. I wish you could see the pictures: even the stereotyping is ignorant. No matter how you look at it the text and pictures are inexcusable. With friends like that the whales and seals don't need enemies.

THE HAPPY PRINCE, by Oscar Wilde. Methuen. $7.95.

I had not before noticed how much Oscar Wilde's fairy tales owe to Hans Andersen. The Happy Prince has exactly the same kind of ironic comment, on the indifference of the rich to the poor, the utilitarian approach to art, society's concern with trivia, that one finds in Andersen. Even the Wilde characters are reminiscent of Andersen: there is a swallow (as in Thumbelina) a little match girl (as in Andersen's story of that name) and a lead heart that will not melt (all that is left of The Steadfast Tin Soldier is a tin heart).

But if Wilde did imitate, he was skilful enough to do it very well. There is enough interest and emotion to appeal to any reader as the swallow sacrifices himself out of devotion to the statue of the prince who weeps for the poor whom in life he had never known existed. The simple morality and high ideals could hardly be conveyed today with such conviction, and are perhaps the more moving for that reason.

The question remains: is this a story which benefits from the picture-book format? On the strength of Kaj Beckman's illustrations, definitely not, though one day some artist may persuade me differently.

FLYING DIMITRI, by Blair Drawson. Douglas and McIntyre. $7.95.

The most captivating creature Drawson has given us in this picture-book is a dragon with tufts of hair growing out of his ears and a rotund shape that put him firmly into the realms of ferocious but lovable elderly gentlemen, especially since he breathes little puffs of smoke that ought to come from a pipe.

Unfortunately, the story is too fragmented: Dimitri flies, sees whales, goes to Mars, rescues the Martians' queen (from the dragon). "Are you my mother?" he asks her rather pathetically (for this is a book directed to the single male parent experience) in a manner, however psychologically accurate, quite unrelated to the plot. The narrative goes off in all directions; a pity, because Drawson's pictures have an ethereal charm.

What the Moon Saw is based on the concept of opposites. Big, little; furry, feathered are given definition by the animals in Wildsmith's richly colored pictures. It is a pleasing though not novel idea, and it needs a special twist, a basic imaginative thrust, which unfortunately the device of the moon being shown the earth by the sun does not provide.

Are Wildsmith's pictures enough to compensate? At one time I would have said yes; but after so many books? Although the brilliant color and design never falter, he seems fixed in one mode: the layout and techniques are so much the same from book to book that he might be producing the tigers, leopards and lions to a formula. Although some of this new work may have a sense of freshness and commitment, this has not.

SONGS FROM ALICE, by Don Harper and Charles Folkard. Nelson. $5.95.

Lewis Carroll's best-known verses from Wonderland and Through the Looking-Glass have been set to music by Don Harper in a charmingly produced book that makes use of the 1921 illustrations by Charles Folkard.

Folkard, rather than trying to escape Tenniel's influence, frequently based his images firmly on them, extending and altering with a good-humored acknowledgement that makes the exercise well worthwhile. The Jabberwock, for instance, is much like Tenniel's spooky beast (and not much less frightening) but with the addition of a velvet cap, bejewelled belt, quilted trousers and dangling moustache has the air of a Sultan out of the Arabian Nights. Alice herself, however, is not Tenniel's, but a 1920's rosy-cheeked cutie, with long-waisted dresses and a much softer expression than the original. The quaintnesses owe much to Rackham: spindly legs and enormous feet (mostly with bunions by the look of them), careful details of china and a greenish tinge to the grotesquirie. Altogether, with sepia print and framed pages, the book conveys a pleasant sense of period and would be much enjoyed by all Alice collectors.--J.T.

Another on Bandwagon

Like all good things in great quantity, you can have too much. For me, it is the typical contemporary children's novel in which a boy or girl faces a searing emotional experience and comes to terms with it, usually the difficulties of having parents divorced, separated, or otherwise inadequate. It is not that I feel on the losing side as a parent, or that I think it likely — as I do — that a child with problems of this kind derives more comfort from a visit to Middle Earth than a novel which dissects his own problems at length; it's simply boredom: ah, another one on the bandwagon.

All the same, I picked up Helen Chetin's The Lady of the Strawberries (Peter Martin Associates, $7.95) with a sense of anticipation. Although it was obviously another problem novel, it looked as though it might have a welcome vein of fantasy, since the lady in question was a scare-robin (rather than a scarecrow) Jessica made out of her grandmother's old clothes. Jessica's mother has left home, unable to stand the isolation of the farm in Alberta, and Jessica, having become involved in the difficult project of growing a field of strawberries, begins to talk to the lady she has made to protect them.

Chetin writes with an affectionate feeling for the Alberta landscape, but the standard psychology of it all sustains little plot, and the appealing gentleness is unleavened by any robust characterization. Worst of all, substitute mother though she is, the lady of the strawberries never shows a sign of life, except symbolically by providing a buoyant support that saves Jessica from drowning.

Catherine McVicar's The Grass Beyond the Door (Methuen, $7.95) immediately seems more interesting. She writes with a delight in words and images that augurs well for the account of Miranda's adventures with her talking cat Sinbad. The trouble is that each episode is so short, so fragmentary, that it is only just begun and it is finished. So many references are made and never explained that in the end the plot seems merely capricious, a series of interesting ideas thrown out here and there that evaporate in a most annoying way. A pity, because this is a homegrown Canadian fantasy and there simply aren't many of those around.

Monica Hughes' The Ghost Dance Caper (Nelson, $7.95) uses the Alberta Provincial Museum for setting. Tom Lightfoot is confused over his allegiance to his Indian and White heritage, and finds his grandfather, the old Indian chief, more understanding than either his parents or his friends. Grandfather advises him to "find his spirit," but this needs to be done with due ceremony, including the use of a "ghost bundle", the only remaining one of which is the Museum. Theft of the bundle becomes mingled with theft of a baser kind in a competently told adventure that wears some fashionable emotional dilemmas of childhood lightly.

E. D. WARD-HARRIS

One of my early mentors counselled me to avoid authors like the plague. They should be read but not seen, he said. He was right. Whenever I disregarded his sound advice I allowed myself to be influenced by a person more than that person's work. In pulling punches to avoid bruising feelings, critical judgment is impaired. However, deliberate avoidance of all literary people can be professionally injurious, so one must effect a compromise.

I go to ground whenever authors come to town to peddle their wares, and seek them out when they're not trying to sell something. In this way one meets some interesting people, widens one's horizons, and avoids risk to professional integrity. It is easy to do this in Victoria because everyone seems to come here sooner or later, and it is just a question of waiting patiently, like a spider.

Last week, Nigel Nicolson came to my web and I spent an interesting hour or so with him at the Empress and later in the day went to the University of Victoria to listen to his lecture on the art of biography. Later still, I met him again at a private reception. By the end of the day I felt I understood him as well as any stranger is ever likely to understand such an obviously complicated, contained and somewhat tormented individual.

Condescending

Nicolson fancies himself as a writer of note, which is something even his dearest friends would be hard-pressed to support with evidence, and he was clearly put out when I repeatedly steered the conversation away from his original writing to other subjects, such as editing, publishing, and even politics, about which his views are rightly respected.

To be offended is typical of condescending Englishmen when they are not instantly accepted at their own estimation, particularly by a lowly scribe in what they still think of as a remote, insignificant colony.

However, in all fairness, I must add that Nicolson soon recovered his composure and ended up by pressing me to prolong our private chat.

The fact is that Nigel Nicolson, like his late father, Sir Harold Nicolson, is a literary dilettante. He can, and does, write about all manner of people and things — whatever appears to be marketable — and he does so fluently, but without deep feelings or convictions. He has written about such diverse subjects as the domestic architecture of great English country houses, the Grenadlier Guards (in which he served during the war), and the Himalayas (for Time-Life, one of whose editors, incidentally, practically rewrote the book, much to Nicolson's digust).

I suggested to Nicolson that he seemed most comfortable in the role of editor (of his father's diaries and letters and of the letters of Virginia Woolf) but this suggestion didn't sit well; he prefers to be thought of as a writer, particularly of biographies. As he is a competent editor and only a run-of-the-mill biographer, he reminds me, in this respect, and in another context, of the self-deluded Sir Arthur Sullivan. However, as he sees himself primarily as a biographer, let us deal with that aspect.

Excluding his best-selling account of his parents' private lives (Portrait of a Marriage) Nicolson has written only two biographies and is still bogged down in the fourth year of research for his next effort, a psychological assessment of Napoleon.

His first venture into biography was his easily forgettable life of Lord Leverhulme and he was clearly embarrassed that I even knew of it, so much so that I glossed over his biography of Field Marshal Alexander, which was equally memorable.

The failure of the Alexander book was not Nicolson's fault. The modest field-marshal detested publicity and only reluctantly agreed to a posthumous biography — and then died before a single interview could take place. The result was a pasting together of material from public and some private sources, and in my review of the book (April, 1973) I rather damned it with faint praise. A second reading, just before Nicolson arrived here last week, confirmed my earlier opinion.

I hope Nicolson has more success with Napoleon, and I shall be most interested to see how he handles the task. I wondered aloud what he could find to add to Correlli Barnett's Bonaparte, which also took the psychological approach. Nicolson dismissed that fine historian's work disparagingly as "just a tiny book." Barnett's work was short and popular, but it was rich in content. Can Nicolson do substantially better? He reckons he has two more years of reading to do, making five in all, before commencing to write. So we'll just have to wait and see.

Nicolson has given considerable thought to biographical writing since he wrote the life of Alexander. This was evident in his talk with me and even more so in his lecture at the university, during which he reviewed the turgid offerings of 19th century biographers, who transformed their subjects into wartless saints, and then cited Lytton Strachey's vitriolic Eminent Victorians as the catalytic book which made honest biographies acceptable and which led inevitably, but lamentably, to the often distasteful 'tell-all' books of today.

A biography is more satisfactory than an autobiography, Nicolson told his audience, because no one can write of himself that he acquired fame through his charm or his integrity or his cleverness. He obviously hasn't read Joey Smallwood's autobiography!

More interesting was his observation that a biographer should not be a mere recorder of facts but should also forcibly express his own opinions. I question the value of strong opinions based on hindsight; better by far that a biographer selects his material in order to present a rounded portrait and allows the facts to speak for themselves. For example, in Martin Gilbert's official history of Winston Churchill we don't need to be told that the man was a snob, a lover of war, and a belittler of women; the stated facts makes these things abundantly clear.

Confused

Nicolson's thinking became more apparent when he touched on the tricky business of suppression of facts. He claims that this is permissable if disclosure might cause anguish to a close living relative. He did in fact suppress Alexander's affair with his sister-in-law, about which Lady Alexander remained in ignorance. He excuses himself by stating that this had no bearing on the field-marshal's career or character.

In direct contradiction to this view, Nicolson then stresses that a biography should portray its subject warts and all, and that if one is requested by a widow, for instance, to suppress something important, it is far better to refuse to write the book than to compromise one's integrity as a writer. He seems to be confused on this important point and I'm happy for him that the dilemma won't arise in his dealings with Napoleon.

I have not been very complimentary to Nicolson the writer but then, as I said earlier, his record has not been all that impressive. And it is because of this that I encouraged him to talk of other matters, such as editing, publishing, politics, his parents, and of course Virginia Woolf. He was far more at home in these subjects and he talked freely, frankly and engagingly.

Next week, I'll tell you what he had to say.

Christmas with Daffs

Children's books come rolling in at Christmas like gingerbread men, hot off the press and ready to be eaten. This year there were many more than enough to satisfy one appetite, and a number of them went into deep-freeze, like the remains of the turkey. So here you are, a few titles to prepare you for next Christmas while you watch the daffodils.

Raymond Briggs' The Complete Father Christmas (Nelson, $9.95) which includes the original story plus the sequel, Father Christmas Goes on Holiday, belongs on everyone's bookshelf.

You will remember that Father Christmas, who does not live at the North Pole, but with his dog, cat, hot-water bottle and outside privy in a little English backstreet, dreamed of sunshine and Spain while on his snowy delivery route. So with the help of a welding mask and some modern tools, he turns the sleigh into a camper; then he puts the reindeer on the front and takes off.

In The Snowman (Nelson, $6.95) he is at work again on another wintry story, but with some variations on the basic strip cartoon format. A few speech balloons went up as Father Christmas fumed at the cold and the chimneys, but The Snowman is entirely without words, and in soft oil pastels unlike the bright colors of the former. A cheery smiling snowman comes alive and accompanies the boy on a number of adventures. As in most of Briggs' illustrating, the cheeky humor is derived from setting the fairy-tale figures in the context of everyday living and imagining the results.

Astrid Lindgren's Lotta's Christmas Surprise (Methuen, $7.50) is what one would expect from a master story-teller, unforced, thoroughly enjoyable; why aren't they all like this? I find myself wondering if good stories aren't going out of fashion. It isn't as though anything exceptional is happening, but it is all so interesting. Cheerful little Lotta, who will insist that she can do anything, and her old stuffed pig, Bamsie, get into some scrapes and come out triumphantly with the needed Christmas tree. Ilon Wikland's pictures improve upon acquaintance. They look like the standard bright picture book fare at first, until you notice the odd perspectives that secure everything to the ground with more than usual firmness and a curving sturdy comfort. --J.T.

LOOKING AT STARS

By RUTH THOMPSON

Robin Williams had better look to his out-of-this-world credentials Monday night (April 9). That's when his "Mork and Mindy" co-star, Pam Dawber, lets loose for the first time on TV as a siner when she guests on Perry Como's ABC "Salute to Hollywood." Pam ranges over four supra-human octaves.

Every day hundreds of tourists clot into groups behind a guide to gaze at the physical grandeur of The Library of Congress and gasp at some of the facts that fall their way.

But none of them ever had it as good as any of us can this week on PBS (Tuesday in most cities) as Sir Huw Wheldon wangles his camera crew into usually off-limit nooks and crannies. Even examines a paper-wrapped package, containing clippings, glasses, Confederate money and a hanky embroidered "A. Lincoln," all of which were in the pockets of the Civil War president who was martyred 104 years ago next week at The Ford Theatre.

Sir Huw explains: "You see, though the library subscribes to 117,000 periodicals and processes 7,000 new books a day, it is much more: photos, ads, sheet music, maps, movies and, just recently, television tapes."

Sir Huw hinted he may take a bit of a vacation soon. Don't believe it. He's been spending summer seminars in Aspen, Colo. That's the serendipity that triggered this special. One of the friendships he formed their is with Dr. Daniel Boorstin, who is now The Librarian of Congress. When Sir Huw visited Boorstin's domain in Washington, he was impressed enough to want to share his deluxe version of the tour with Britons as well as Americans.

A few conferences here and there and a co-production was set up with WNET-13 in New York and England's BBC, which Sir Huw headed until his retirement, which freed him to develop shows on his own. (Last year he got carte blanche to peruse the homes and treasures of England's sovereigns. The resulting mini-series was "Royal Heritage," which starts a repeat cycle, also on PBS, this week).

It isn't that Kenny Rogers said he wouldn't ever go home to Texas. Just that after success started hurling golden records his way, Kenny couldn't detour back to Crockett, Texas.

Until he saw it as a suitable location segment, that is, for his first TV special, due Thursday (April 12) on CBS. Kenny has lost track of the number of years he's been away. But he can tell you how many of his kin — 30 — showed up) for the on-camera reunion.

You know where to look for "Sesame Street." On television, of course. But "Sesame Place?" Try Bucks County, Pa., but not until next year.

That's when the non-television spin-off of the series will evolve into a new theme park for youngsters up to the age of 13.

Among those committed to the venture are Joan Ganz Cooney of The Children's Television Workshop, which did the original research that led to "Sesame Street," and the Busch Gardens people who have different types of theme parks elsewhere (Williamsburg, Va., for one). Word is that this project is an entirely new concept with computerized learning games part of the scene.

Cousteau Searching For Roman Plunder

Diving for Roman Plunder, the chronical of an underwater search by Captain Jacques Cousteau to recover Greek treasures from an ancient Roman ship, airs on The Cousteau Odyssey Sunday, April 8, at 8 p.m. on Channel 9 (also Thursday, April 12, at 10 p.m.).

Narrated by actress Melina Mecouri, Roman Plunder investigates an early instance of one of civilization's unresolved scandals — the pillage of Grecian art. Roman emperors, after conquering Greek city-states, made off in Roman ships with their booty. Later, Renaissance nobles, and British and French aristocrats, stole or smuggled Greek art, seeing its acquisition as a badge of refinement and status.

In the centuries-long struggle for Greek art, much as been lost or destroyed: Cousteau believes much of this missing art still is underwater, preserved from the ravages of collectors.

In order to prove Cousteau's theory, the Calypso travels to the Greek island of Antikythera in the Aegean Sea where, in 1900, sponge divers discovered ancient scientific instruments.

Unlike the early divers, Cousteau is equipped with a powerful blower pump which exposes artifacts hidden under the sand. An underwater suction pipe then vacuums up archaeological salvage from the sea floor. The salvage is flushed through a basket strainer hanging over Calypso's side, with only sand and silt passing through the fine mesh.

Calypso's finds are plentiful — and include a lamp, a cup, a marble arm, a vase, and several statues. In a ceremony passing the discoveries over to the Greek government, Cousteau says: "Another handful of fragments have been returned to man's visible inheritance from the past, telling of civilizations that have come and gone."
